OIL SCANDAL CASES FOUGHT BITTERLY; END STILL REMOTE

Sinclair, Fall And Doheny
Delay Action By
Appeals

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—After a week of skirmishing by lawyers, the end of the famous oil scandal cases appeared today to be far off.

The intention of the principals to fight virtually every move of the government to the last technical refuge in the supreme court was indicated by their legal maneuvers.

Harry W. Sinclair, millionaire oil magnate, who was indicted with former Secretary of the Interior Albert B. Fall on charges of conspiring to defraud the government in the Teapot Dome deal, has taken the second of three cases involving him to the supreme court.

Despite the fact that Fall and Edward L. Doheny, head of the Pan-American Petroleum Company, are scheduled to face trial in the criminal court here on November 22 on another conspiracy charge growing out of the Elk Hills, Calif., naval oil reserve lease, there was also a possibility that this case will be delayed by a new move.

Attorneys for ex-Secretary Fall may seek delay through a challenge to the authority of congress to name special prosecutors.

The supreme court now has before it a civil suit involving the legality of the Doheny lease on the Elk Hills reserve. A similar suit to cancel the lease of Harry F. Sinclair's Mammoth Oil Company on Teapot Dome has just reached the high court on a petition for review.

Sinclair's latest move is to take into the high court an appeal from the District of Columbia circuit court of appeals dismissing his special appeal to that tribunal.

Another case which the oil magnate is fighting is a citation for contempt in refusing to answer questions of a senate committee. This case has been virtually in suspension for many months, awaiting a high court ruling in the Mal S. Daugherty case.

The civil suits have already run the gamut of the federal district courts and circuit courts of appeals.

The government has charged in its suits that the alleged conspiracy to gain huge profits from the oil on naval reserves had its real inception in the passing of the leasing act of 1920. It is possible that years may elapse before the last legal battle based on the controversy has been waged.

FORTY THREE ARE INDICTED BY JURY

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 6.—Forty three indictments involving almost one hundred defendants on charges ranging from liquor and dope to mail fraud were on record here today by the federal grand jury late yesterday after ten days' deliberation.

Featuring the speed of federal court was the case of John French, Akron, O., who was sentenced to five years in the Atlanta federal prison just five minutes after the indictment for using the mails to defraud was returned against him.

Seven per cent of the indictments returned charged the defendants with violation of the national prohibition law. Noteworthy among these was that of Harry E. Dorsey, former mayor of Linndale, O., who is charged with accepting a liquor violation and on a conspiracy count.

WILL OPPOSE PLAN FOR RAIL MERGER

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—The plan of the New York Central railroad to control under lease of the Big Four, Michigan Central and Chicago, Kalamazoo and Saginaw railroads will be vigorously protested before the interstate commerce commission, it was indicated today when the commission permitted various organizations to intervene in the case.

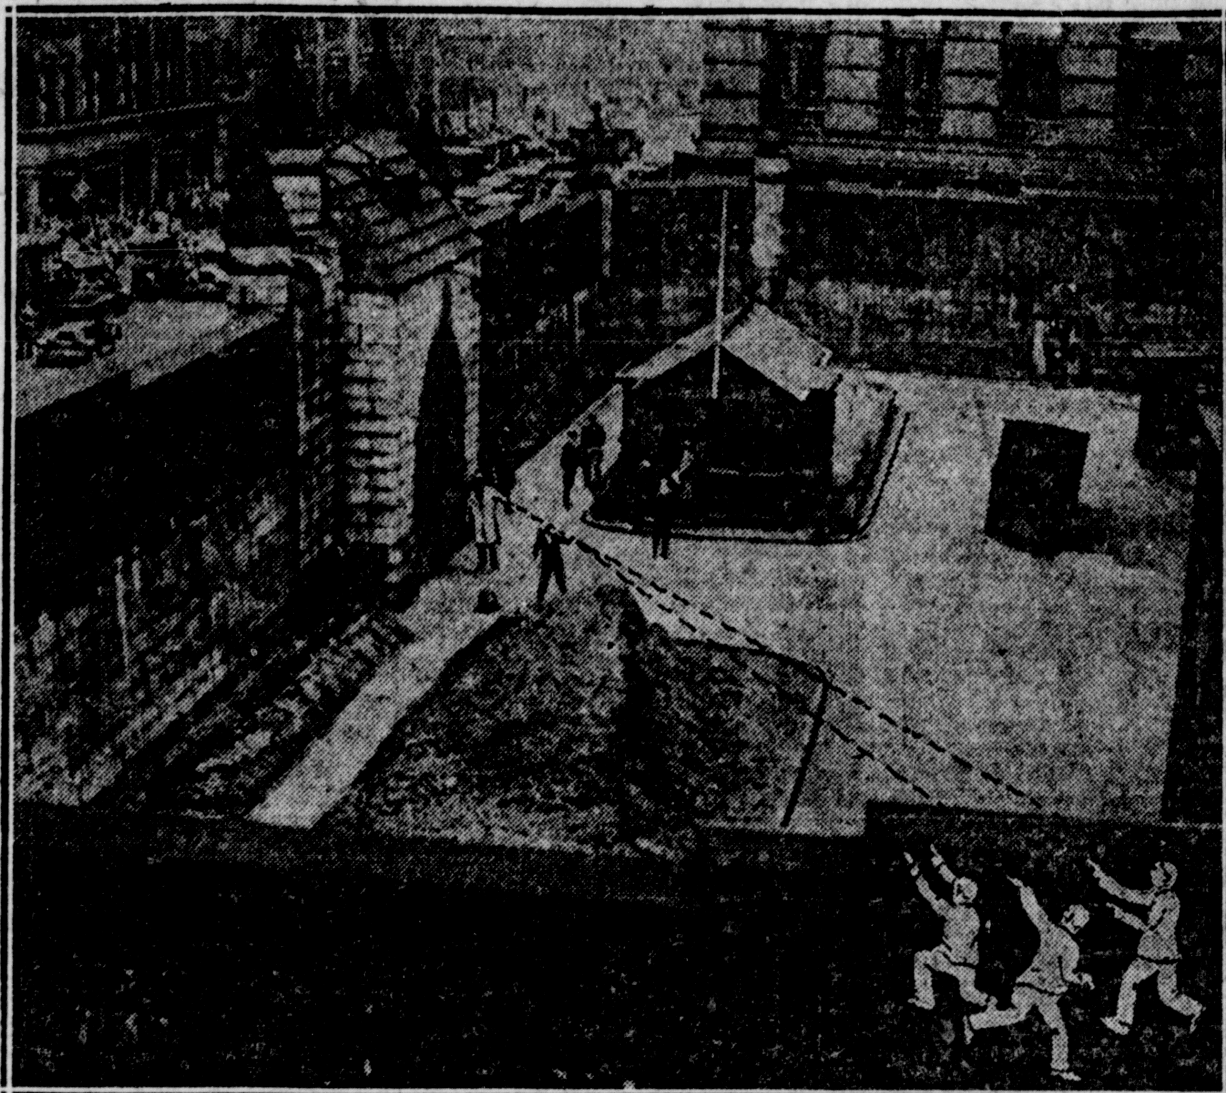

Those authorized to intervene include the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation, Ohio Farm Bureau Service Company, Ohio Public Utilities Commission, the Stockholders' Protective Committee of the Big Four, Athens (Ohio) Chamber of Commerce and District No. 6 of the United Mine Workers.

GOVERNOR LEADING BY SMALL MAJORITY

PHOENIX, Ariz., Nov. 6.—With but four more precincts to be heard from, Governor Hunt today was leading his Republican opponent, E. S. Clark, by 366 votes. Clark refused to concede the reelection of Hunt.

Because of the closeness of the race and charges of ballot-box stuffing in two counties, a recount or contest loomed today, according to rumors.

Where Four Died in Attempted Jail Break

This picture was taken during the battle between police and three prisoners who attempted to shoot their way to freedom from the Tombs Prison in New York. Two prisoners and two guards were killed, and the third prisoner wounded. The artist has drawn in figures to illustrate the exchange of shots in the courtyard.

SCHEME TO DEFRAUD CANTON COMPANY OF MONEY IS REVEALED

Pair Indicted For Mis-
using Mails In Stock
Fraud

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 6.—Details of a scheme by which the United Steel Alloy Company, of Canton, was to have been defrauded of huge sums were made known here today following return of indictments by a federal grand jury against William Hodge, an inspector for the steel organization and Arthur R. Mason, of Cleveland. They are charged with misuse of the mails.

The two men are alleged to have formed a brokerage company here and had solicited customers through the mails, according to D. C. Vanburen, assistant United States district attorney.

The scheme was to ship first-grade steel to the brokerage firm, here billed as second-grade material. The product then was to be resold at top prices, the brokers splitting the profits.

PHYSICIAN, POET AND INVENTOR DIES

CINCINNATI, Nov. 6.—Funeral services for Dr. John Robertson, 72, widely-known poet, physician, inventor, politician and "dry" worker, will be held here next Monday, it was announced by relatives today, following his death late yesterday, at a hospital here.

Death was due, physicians stated to inflammation of the heart.

Dr. Robertson was born in Kinloch, Ramoth, Scotland. He was the inventor of various medical apparatus and several other devices, including a sprayer-cultivator for exterminating the boll weevil.

As well as being a highly-rated physician, the dead man was also a strong advocate of prohibition and several times was a candidate for governor of Ohio and congressman.

MAN DEAD AND WIFE HURT AFTER REVEL

TOLEDO, O., Nov. 6.—Howard A. Ewald, 24, is dead and his wife, Betty, seriously injured as the result of bullet wounds received during a fight which climaxed an all-night revel here early this morning.

The altercation took place in the home of Edward Langley, where it is alleged that Ewald became enraged at a remark made concerning his wife, George Reuther, another visitor at the house, became involved in the affair and is alleged by police to have fired several shots.

Langley and Reuther are being held for investigation.

HALL-MILLS PROSECUTOR IN QUANDARY; STAR WITNESS ILL

Testimony Of "Pig Woman" May Be Delayed Several Weeks—Simpson Fears Case May Be Damaged.

SOMERVILLE, N. J., Nov. 6.—Prosecutor Alexander Simpson, dominant figure in the Hall-Mills murder trial, today faced a dilemma—the fact that the state's star witness, Mrs. Jane Gibson, the "pig woman," is so seriously ill that she may not be able to testify in court for weeks.

JEWISH PATRIARCH DIES IN DENVER

DENVER, Nov. 6.—Henry Kadish, Denver's patriarch of Jewry, is dead at the age of 108 years.

For many years a familiar figure on the streets of Denver, Kadish enjoyed good health up to within a week of his death, which was hastened by a fall that broke his right leg.

Born in Russia in 1818, the white haired full bearded old man had experienced a fullness of life of sorrow and sadness, joy and achievement that ended amid comfortable circumstances and found him beloved by thousands of friends and neighbors in this city.

Kadish, in his early life, rose from private in the czar's army to the rank of general, and is believed to have been the only general in the Crimean war of Jewish birth.

GOVERNMENT LOSES SUIT AND APPEALS

CINCINNATI, O., Nov. 6.—The United States circuit court of appeals today had under consideration the appeal of the government from the decree of the federal district court here in the government's attempt to regain $5,000,000 alleged overpayments from A. Bentley and Sons Company, Toledo.

The overpayments, the government contended, were made during its contract with the Toledo concern for the construction of Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, O., in 1917.

The appeal was taken by the government after the suit had been ordered dismissed in federal district court here.

Arguments were heard late yesterday in the case.

ISABELLE POPE TO ASK RE-HEARING

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Nov. 6.—Attorneys representing Isabelle Pope, fiancée of Billy McClintock, today filed notice with the clerk of the supreme court that they will file a petition for rehearing of the court's decision at the October term admitting McClintock's will to probate.

The will of McClintock, for whose death William Shepherd stood trial for murder, left a $1,000,000 estate to Shepherd, who was acquitted.

REPUBLICANS FACE DEMOCRAT CONTROL IF FRAZIER REBELS

North Dakota Senator
Read Out Of Party
May Get Revenge

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—After suffering a series of defeats in Tuesday's elections, the Republican party faced a new peril today in the possibility that the Democrats may assume actual control of the senate in the new congress.

While the Republicans boasted of holding forty-eight seats in the new senate—just enough to organize that body after next March 4—their calculations included Senator Lynn J. Frazier, of North Dakota, insurgent, who was openly and eagerly thrown out of the party just twenty months ago. Now, like a "chicken come home to roost," Frazier hasn't made up his mind whether he'll be a party Republican when it comes time to organize the senate.

Without Frazier's vote the senate would divide forty-seven Republicans, forty-seven Democrats, one Farmer-Laborite and one independent—as the Republicans themselves have classified the North Dakotan since March, 1925. This Republican strength includes Senators-elect Smith, of Illinois, and Vane of Pennsylvania, and, if their certificates are refused at the initial session of the new senate, all hope of Republican control will be destroyed.

If Frazier votes with the Democrats to organize—regardless of the Smith and Vane contests—that

SHOCK KILLS WOMAN FOLLOWING RAID BY STATE DRY RAIDERS

Husband Will Sue; May
Ask Change In State
Law

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 6.—A charge in the state law which urged her today by Safety Director Edwin D. Barry as an investigator of the death of Mrs. John Ponkrac, 42, got under way.

The woman died, presumably of fright and shock, a few minutes after dry agents, working under a suburban justice of the peace, raided her home in Cleveland late yesterday. Barry questioned the raiders for an hour after Cleveland police had placed them up. They declared they found half a pint of whiskey and 100 gallons of wine in the cellar and that they had a search warrant. Police today were checking reports that the woman had been roughly treated by the raiders. The woman's husband announced he would bring a damage suit against the raiders on behalf of himself and his five children. An autopsy was to be performed today to check reports by an undertaker that he found marks upon the woman's abdomen indicating she had been roughly handled.

POLICEMAN KILLED

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 6.—Harry A. Kral, a motorcycle policeman, was killed here today when an automobile he was driving skidded, catapulting his body into a telephone pole.

MYSTERY CONTINUES TO CURTAIN IDENTITY OF SKELETON FOUND

Circumstances surrounding the death of an aged man, apparently between sixty and seventy-five years of age, whose completely decomposed body was found in tall weeds on the farm of J. W. Dice, Fairground Road, Thursday, will probably always remain a mystery.

The body is believed by Coroner R. L. Haines, Jamestown, to have been that of Washington Battleton, 75, colored, who escaped from the County Infirmary three months ago. The skeleton bore no marks of violence and it is supposed the man died a natural death while hunting black berries.

Identification has not been definitely made and Coroner Haines is believed to consider the investigation a closed incident. Remains were buried in Woodland Cemetery Friday by R. M. Neel, undertaker.

QUEEN MARIE BRINGS PEACE TO ENTOURAGE

ABOARD QUEEN MARIE'S SPECIAL TRAIN, (IN WASHINGTON), Nov. 6.—The magnetic queen of Roumania smiled today upon the turbulent forces seeking to serve her and peace dawned over her kingdom on wheels.

Her majesty took hold of a delicate situation with the diplomacy for which she is famed. The beautiful Balkan queen let it be known that she considered recent untoward incidents aboard her transcontinental train as merely the growth of a too-ardent desire on the part of the combatants to represent her interests. While taking no direct side in the controversy between Sam Hill, whose guest she was at the dedicatory exercises at

Failure Of Three Mill Levy Tuesday Leaves City
"Broke"—City Hall Closed—Legion Volunteers Assistance

WASHINGTON, C. H., Nov. 6.—This little town may be patrolled by American Legion men and its fire department may be manned by veterans of the World War after Sunday because the citizens failed to vote favorably on a three-mill bond issue last Tuesday.

Mayor George Allen has notified the water and electric companies that the city was "broke" and would not be responsible for any more bills contracted. His next move was to cut the fire and police departments to one man each. Then he moved his office to his own private law office, closing the city hall.

The American Legion volunteered for duty until the crisis can be met.

Chicago heard rumors that Mrs. Dorothy Benjamin Caruso Ingram, widow of the Italian tenor, was engaged to Charles H. Wacker, Jr., war aviator.

WIFE-SLAYER GOES ON TRIAL; CROWDS JAM BATAVIA COURT

Extra Guards Placed
Around Accused Man
—Pick Jury

BATAVIA, O., Nov. 6.—The largest crowd that ever jammed the little Clermont County Court House milled into the court room today, where the trial of Nicholas Workman, alleged wife-slayer, was expected to get under way.

Extra guards were ordered placed around the accused man both in the court room and during the time he spends in his cell.

His wife, mother of eleven children, nine of which are now living, was found dead in their country home last August. When officers attempted to take Workman into custody he seized two of his babies, holding them in front of him to prevent the officers from firing, the state alleges.

A venire of more than 200 prospective jurors was exhausted before a jury was secured yesterday. No women were chosen to act on the jury.

CINCINNATI, O., Nov. 6.—John Briens, 80-year-old "newsboy," was dead here today. He was struck and killed by a switch engine in the railroad yards last night.

EUROPE COMBINING AGAINST AMERICA SAYS PARIS SCRIBE

Common Enmity Is Bringing Old Enemies
Together

By BASIL WOON
Staff Correspondent of EFS and
The Daily Gazette
Copyright, 1926 (EFS)

PARIS, Nov. 6.—Common enmity of America has brought war-torn Europe together. A once-terrible war hatreds are being buried by mutual distrust and antagonism of the United States. Nations which were implacable foes but a few years ago are toasting each other in secret conferences which have but one aim: The humbling of the United States.

Until recently the subject of uncomplimentary cartoons in the Paris press was the Boche. They drew him fat and grotesque with a large round head and a little feathered hat. Now these same cartoonists concentrate their venom on the American. No longer is Uncle Sam the cheerful, bountiful gallant gentleman with chin-whiskers and striped trousers. Now they picture him as a swollen, repulsive individual with a hook nose, gold pouring from his money bags and a bill in his hand. In their prints he is a Shylock. In their pictures he is a bailiff, a merciless creditor.

Aux Ecoutes, famous political weekly owned by an influential man named Levy urges: (a) That Americans be forbidden to land in France without payment of a heavy tax in dollars; (b) That all American cafes and restaurants in Paris be abolished by law; (c) That any American caught buying French land or real estate property should be given the alternative of becoming a French citizen (involving military service) and having his purchase confiscated; (d) That Americans be obliged to change all their dollars at the Bank of France.

INCOME TAX PAYER MAY GET 25 CENTS

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—The average small taxpayer in America will get a refund of twenty-five cents if congress approves President Coolidge's plan for a ten to twelve per cent rebate on 1926 incomes, it was revealed today by treasury figures.

Income tax officials regard the "average small taxpayer," as a married man with two dependents, who earns $5,000 or less a year. For extremely wealthy taxpayers the refunds will amount to $200,000 in some cases.

ALLEGED LIQUOR DEALER IS KILLED

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 6.—Detectives here today advance two theories for the death of Angelo Bottaro—a love triangle or warfare between bootleggers. He had been convicted three times on liquor charges. Bottaro was killed by a fusillade of shots as he sat in an automobile. He had been invited to "take a ride" by another man believed also to have been an illicit rum dealer.

Police are questioning Bottaro's sweetheart.

KING WILL OPPOSE DISMISSAL POWER

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 6.—Asserting that the recent supreme court decision giving the president power to dismiss unfit federal office-holders was not in harmony with the principles of constitutional government, Senator Wm. H. King, of Utah, declared here today that a constitutional amendment nullifying this decision will be submitted at the next session of congress.

TESTIMONY IN HALL- MILLS CASE DENIES STORY OF DEFENDANT

Mrs. Marie Demarest
Cross-Examined at
Murder Trial

COURT HOUSE, Somerville, N. J., Nov. 6.—Mrs. Marie Demarest, witness for the state in the Hall-Mills murder trial, was recalled to the stand for cross-examination when court opened at 10:15 a. m. today.

She has attacked the alibi of Henry Stevens, who, with his brother, Willie, and his sister Mrs. Frances Stevens Hall, is charged with the murder of the Rev. Edward W. Hall and his attractive young choir singer, Mrs. Eleanor Mills.

Mrs. Demarest, who was a member of Dr. Hall's church, had testified that Henry Stevens was the man she saw in New Brunswick the day before the bodies were found in Dr. Russey's lane. Stevens had claimed he was not in New Brunswick until his sister sent for him after the bodies were found.

Mrs. Demarest replied spiritedly to Defense Attorney Clarence E. Case's questions.

"You saw Henry Stevens in an automobile?"

"Yes."

"As you were getting off a car?"

"Yes."

"Was it a closed or an open car?"

"I don't remember."

"You remember you saw Henry Stevens?"

"I certainly do."

"Anybody with you that morning on the trolley car?"

"No!" thundered Mrs. Demarest.

"Why do you shout your answer like that?" asked Case.

Prosecutor Alexander Simpson

bounced to his feet, asserting Case had no business to ask the witness "why she was elevating her eyebrows, changing her tone or any other such trivial matter."

Case said he wanted to show the witness' attitude.

The question went unanswered.

MARINES LAND AID NOW CONTROL CITY

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 6.—The marines landed here today and have been well taken in hand. Active and former leathernecks from all parts of the country, numbering several hundred, were in attendance at the national convention of their organization, under the direction of Major General John A. Lejune, commander.

A colorful parade, which will be climaxed by a banquet tonight, was the outstanding feature of the program, although chief interest centered on the football game between the corps team from Quantico, Va., and John Carroll University.

FORD MERGER PLAN WILL BE ARGUED

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—Henry Ford's plan to merge his railroad properties will be argued orally before the interstate commerce commission on November 27, it was announced today. The Ford plan involves the acquisition of control of the Detroit, Toledo and Ironton and the Toledo-Detroit by the Detroit and Ironton. Majority stockholders, who hold about two per cent of the stock of the Detroit, Toledo and Ironton, are fighting the proposed merger on the grounds that Ford has not allowed them sufficient amount per share for their stock.

BURY ANNIE OAKLEY IN CINCINNATI

CINCINNATI, O., Nov. 6.—Annie Oakley, known in private life as Mrs. Frank Butler but once heralded throughout the world and under the "big tops" as the "greatest rifle-woman of the universe," was to come back to Cincinnati today.

And here, where many times she drew awe and respect from young and old with dazzling feats of marksmanship, her body was to be cremated—in accordance with her last wish before she died, earlier this week, in Greenville, Ohio.

HEAR ADDRESSES

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 6.—Addresses and reports of committees feature today's sessions here of the Central Ohio Teachers' Association. The program called for addresses by Dr. Ernest Horn, Iowa University, on "Modern Tendencies in Moral Education," and by Miss Emily Griffith, director of Denver Opportunity School.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE

Still another example of the complete self-suppression of one's own feeling in the interest of her husband is that of the wife of Disraeli, one time prime minister of England. He was scheduled to make an important address before the House of Lords at the time of a crisis in the government. The welfare of all the British Empire seemed to be wrapped up in the outcome of the action which might be taken following his speech. It was Mrs. Disraeli's custom to ride with him to the house of parliament, but not to enter. Upon this occasion as she entered the brougham, the footman, in closing the door, caught her finger in it and pinched off its end. Concealing her pain from her husband, she rode with him to the journey's end, said goodbye to him, then ordered the coachman to drive her to a doctor, where the injured member was dressed. It was not until after the speech had been delivered and he had returned to his home that the great Disraeli knew of the accident. To have known of it before would have disconcerted him and have weakened the force of his address.

These women, and women of their kind, are not of the "clinging vine" variety. On the other hand they did not aim to attain to the same kind of greatness that characterized their husbands, however, they did attain to an equal degree although in another sphere. It has been said that a woman's best qualities do not reside in her intellect but in her affections. Oliver Wendell Holmes observed that the "brain-women" never interest us like the "heart women." And another has said: "If I were suddenly asked to give a proof of the goodness of God to us, I think I should say that it is most manifest in the exquisite difference He has made between the souls of men and women, so as to create the possibility of the most comforting and charming companionship that the mind of man can imagine."

The army announces that it has saved $10,000 by chopping the tails off 6,000 white butchers' coats left over from the war and using the tails thus cut off for patch pockets and caps for army chefs, while the tailless coats have been turned over to the army cooks and bakers. That is a pretty piece of economy and suggests others that might be effected. For instance, they might have made rolling pins out of the wooden ships, or converted the extra horse shoes into armor plate for new cruisers. There were enough left-overs from the war, in almost every department, to last the government comparatively as long as the Thanksgiving turkey remnants usually last the average family, if properly taken care of, and converted into useful articles.

THE PROMENADE

A contemporary writer bewails the passing of the old custom of "promenading" on pleasant evenings, and wishes that it might be restored. There is a reason in his plea. Not so long ago, twilight in almost every community found groups of people—nice people—strolling quietly along the streets, stopping to chat with the groups and combining social intercourse, mild after-dinner exercise and enjoyment of the best part of the day in a fashion as inexpensive as it was charming and conducive to health and neighborliness. As the champion of the promenade points out, it is pity that the fashion of tearing about in motor cars with little result but the exhaustion of purse and nervous energy has so completely superseded this calmer method of enjoyment. "Use your legs," he urges. "It is cheaper than riding and more restful of mind and body."

Those who have the courage to adopt his suggestion and leave the car standing in the garage for a few nights while they promenaded, unhooked and unhooking, in the peaceful twilight, we find that life is right.

LIVING OFF THE SOIL

Up in Sacramento, lives Ked Williams who has offered to make his entire living off a lot 50x150 if anyone will furnish the lot. He is an advocate of the "back to the soil" idea and declares a lot of the size specified is sufficiently large to afford a living for one person. He proposes to grow enough from the soil of the lot to give him a comfortable living, but to the ordinary person it would appear he will be more likely to go hungry a good part of the time. Unless he goes in for chickens and reserves the right to buy food for them on the outside, he will have to do a whole lot of digging in order to grow his living.

The motor car driver who hesitates may not get lost, but he'll get bawled out by traffic cops.

Greene County History

OLD SCHOOL HOUSE

During the initial steps toward educational advancement in this county, the facilities for literary attainments were not so varied as are thrown about the youth of today.

Following our cicero along a fixed path through the woods to an old log school house; rapping, voice from the far interior says, "Come in," we pull the latch ring, enter, and, at the request of the "master," settle down upon a puncheon bench, the cynosure of all eyes.

The first thing we observe is that nearly the whole end of the house is occupied by a fireplace.

within the spacious depths of which the crackling blaze sends forth heat, light and cheerfulness.

Our gaze being attracted to the outside, we look, not through French plate, but a hole made by sawing out a log and replacing it with paper greased with lard.

Our attention is recalled by a shrill voice, "Master, mayn't I get a drink?" The urchin goes to the bucket sitting on a bench near the door, takes the tin from the accustomed peg, dips it full; drinks a few sips, holding it over the bucket meanwhile, pours the balance back, looks around a while, goes back to his seat, and, with his dog's eared book close to his face, is soon lost in study.

We observe the benches are made out of flat rails and puncheons, with wooden pins in them for legs; backs, they have none. The "master" has a table, made by driving pins in the wall and placing hewed puncheons on top of them. Under each window a similar contrivance accommodates the scholars.

Xenia employees of the Pan-Handle are affected by an order that, effective December 1, there will be an increase in wages of all employees now receiving less than $200 per month.

The Casino rink opened for the season and judging from the size of the crowd present, the roller skating fad is still in vogue.

Official returns received at the office of the secretary of state show a tremendous falling off in the total vote cast at the late election. About twenty-five of the young friends of Ernest Beatty gave him a merry surprise at his home on W. Main St., the occasion being his sixteenth birthday.

The Theatre

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—A movie-show where the patrons stroll airily past the doorman with a carelessly drawn—"Charge it!"

That's not the fond dream of little Willie Jones, but an honest-to-goodness reality at forts and camps of the United States Army, where Uncle Sam operates for his soldier boys what are perhaps the only theaters in the world boasting charge accounts for their customers.

The charge account feature has just been made a part of Army regulations and its use as strictly laid down as the movements of "Squads Right" or any other military drill.

These "charge it as you enter" movie houses are in addition to the usual Y. M. C. A. and other free entertainments found in the service. There are 150 of them throughout the Army and they are entirely self-supporting, the profits of the best patronized theatres going to maintain motionpicture program as small remote amecs, according to the War Department.

Julia Marlowe, foremost American actress of Shakespearean roles comes out of retirement from the stage to present her art before the biggest audience of her career—the radio audience. Miss Marlowe has been announced as the star of the Eveready Hour program to be broadcast next Tuesday evening, November 9, from Station WEAF, of New York and its affiliated stations.

Miss Marlowe's voice, said by the foremost critics to be one of the most marvelous in the history of the stage, will be heard for the first time "on the air." Thousands of listeners who have seen and heard her on the stage and millions of others who have neither seen nor heard her, will hear Miss Marlowe's voice in contributions that draw upon her memorable Shakespearean repertoire; that tap Kipling and that bring a message to former service men and families of service men.

MORNING FRIENDS

On people I know slightly
I make my calls at night.
A formal conversation's helped
By much electric light!

In my best bib and tucker,
(Affraid I've come too soon!)
I go to my rare parties
In the middle-afternoon.

But on Em or Sally, goodness!
I drop in any time!
I'm welcome after breakfast,
Or in housecleaning's grime.

To make up one's small social world
It takes all kinds, all blends.
But the nearest and the dearest
Are the early-morning friends!

Every housewife probably has some pet activity she would like to see glorified. Drop a line to Mrs. Rawlings, care of this paper, and tell her about it.

Today's Talk

BELONGINGS

Epictetus gives us the thought that "true education lies in learning to distinguish what is ours from what does not belong to us." But this world is too full of people who think that anything belongs to them that they can lay their hands upon and get away with. As a matter of fact, nothing belongs to anyone that one doesn't earn or deserve. Or I might add appreciate.

All other possessions is just plain or polite thievery!

He who thinks that the money he has will buy him anything, is already a bandit in his heart. Rich people are those who own cities, rivers, entire mountain ranges, winding roads, forests filled with singing birds and roaming herds of the wild, sunsets, and nights made full of the gold of heaven and the demands of the distant

In a novel by Robert Nathan, called "Autumn," there are many beautiful thoughts. Here is one: "Let the young be free to build a new world. It will be happier than ours. It will be a world of love and candor. Perhaps it will be also a world of poverty. That would not do any harm."

Poverty doesn't do anywhere near as much harm as the thought of it. I am speaking of intelligent poverty. Not of the poverty of the slums or of the turn of fortune or fate that leaves a human being at the mercy of injustice.

The only wealth that you may keep is that which you lay aside in your heart. And that which you store in other hearts that are worthy of your gifts. It is a good thing to take an appraisal of your heart every day. What have put into it that will give you nourishment when you need it most?

The happiest kid on Broadway is Marty Ritter.

A few weeks ago Marty, of Red, as he is known to his pals along Tenth Avenue, was doing his stuff—trick dancing—on street corners for pennies. One night Julius Tannen, of the Earl Carroll Vanities, joined the crowd that was watching Marty just off Broadway. Tannen immediately saw possibilities in the ragged urchin, took him to his office and made arrangements to guide Red to stardom.

Now Red is the hardest working member of the Vanities, and the envy of Tenth Avenue.

Charles Bochart, one of the smartest press agents along the Gay White Way, vouches for the truth of the following incident:

Wallace McCutcheon, the actor, bumped into a plain-clothes man who happened in the theatre where McCutcheon is playing, and in the collision McCutcheon felt a suspicious bulge in the cop's hip pocket. The next instant he recognized the policeman as an old acquaintance.

"What do you say we have a little shot?" he said insignificantly. "Sure!" said the cop.

"Follow me!" said Wallace. The actor guided the cop to a dressing room, pulled out two paper cups and a bottle of ginger ale and said: "Produce."

"Produce what?" asked the cop.

"That from the hip," said McCutcheon.

"What? This?" asked the cop, pulling an automatic pistol from the hip pocket. "Oh!" said McCutcheon. "Bag pardon. I thought it was something else."

P. S. The cop also was disappointed.

Police Commissioner William McLaughlin has the city slickers on the run. He's making a determined drive against organized gambling, and knowing Bill McLaughlin as well as I do, I'm (slightly) betting that he drives the card sharps and sure-thing boys off this speculative jale. And more power to him! These gruffers are the most merciless creatures that ever robbed a poor box. They fatten on the gullible, never work at or on anything except a sucker, and make things tough for the real hustlers along Broadway.

The lobby of the Ritz. Lunch time. A score of women, ranging in age from sixteen to sixty-six. All with dresses just to the knees. Tresses just to the ears. Legs crossed. Burlesque house stuff. All waiting for the men who are going to buy their hunches. New York's real "bread line."

FACING THE NECESSARY

In my constant study of house-keeper types I have frequently come across the kind of woman who cannot seem to face the necessary. She is the woman who knows she must clean her living room before her caller arrives—yet who reads "just one more chapter" of a novel thereby forcing herself to rush through her cleaning later and meet her guest in a breathless state.

Often this kind of behind-hand-ness hurts others as well as ourselves. For instance I know of a young mother who never has her little son's luncheon ready for him when he rushes home from school at noon. Anyone on the block can read the woebegone fear on his little face as he hurries up his front steps. He knows from long experience that his lunch is not ready for him. On the contrary, it is not even started; his mother does not go into the kitchen till he arrives. The result is that the poor little fellow bolts a late meal, in his conscientious desire to get back to school in time, and of course gets no good from it because he cannot digest it properly in such a nervous state. Or, worse still, he does not eat enough and thus becomes inattentive and faint in mid-afternoon—unable to do his best work.

Then, we all know the business woman who is constantly running for a train. We wonder why, since she is invariably two or three minutes late, she cannot get up two or three minutes earlier to allow herself to walk to her train?

Such women are either not strong and well—are simply dragging through life, always weary or else they have no zest for life. And by rest I mean little real interest in the things they do. The housekeeper whom I mentioned above, would find a sort of satisfaction in getting her living room cleaned when it should be cleaned, if she were really interested in running her home properly. The mother of that little boy would find joy in making her child's path smooth if she were really interested in her motherhood. The business girl would get up in time to make no mistake in getting that train—if the train were to take her to work she really loved; perhaps the best solution of her problem would be to change her job to something she could find interesting!

ALPHA

The ladies of the Alpha M. P. Church will give a supper, Thursday evening, November 11, at 5:30, Mr. Michael's building. Every body welcome.

Modish Mitzi

DAD HAS AN ABSENT-MINDED MOMENT

Jay V. Jay

Dad being intent upon a chess problem has no more than a murmured, "Very nice, my dear," for Mitzi's coat of sweet gazele—which is no more gazele than stencilled kid can ever be! Mitzi, having had these two coats sent home on approval, is anxious for his opinion.

So she turns it other side out and shows him that it is really reversible and that the futurist effect in two shades of brown in a smart wool fabric is really half of the reason for wanting the coat. Even now he doesn't seem properly impressed.

Perhaps he'll like this one better. It's of black kashmir—soft finish, but it doesn't wrinkle—and the long stole collar is stencilled Baronduki. (Yes, it's kid, same as the other one). Dad is figuring that the fourth move he'll win the game.

The second coat is reversible, too, and Mitzi is explaining just how necessary it is to her wardrobe. Dad has discovered that it will take 75 moves to solve his chess problem so he merely says: "Well, buy all four of them." — solving Mitzi's problem so easily enough!

M'CLELLAND W. C. T. U. ENTERTAINED THURSDAY

About forty members and friends of McClelland W. C. T. U. met at the home of Mrs. Ora Coblenz, Upper Bellbrook Pike, Thursday afternoon. After devotions, a business session was held in which plans for a Christmas treat for the soldiers in Dayton Military Hospital were discussed and left in the hands of the superintendents of the Soldier and Sailor Department, Mrs. Esther McClain and Mrs. Emma Ketter.

A report from the county convention was given by Miss Zetta McClelland and items from the executive meeting by Miss Myrtle Barnett.

A most excellent report of the state convention in Steubenville was given by Mrs. Carrie McCall, delegate from McClelland Union in which the trend was for the exercise of women's franchise.

Decorations featuring Hallowe'en were used about the home. Refreshments of pumpkin pie with whipped cream and coffee were served.

FORTIETH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATED

A very interesting event occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. I. N. Peterson, two miles south of New Burlington, Sunday, in honor of their fortieth wedding anniversary, when their daughter, Aurora, planned a surprise for about twenty guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Peterson found the guests awaiting their arrival from church, the group including guests from Xenia, Wilmington, Springfield and Dayton.

The dining room was the feature of attraction, the south window filled with palms, fuchsias, and begonias, while cut flowers of dahlias, roses and chrysanthemums were in profusion. The long table was laden with choice viands, including twelve large cakes, one bearing forty candles.

Ten guests were present and only ten more are living, out of the seventy-five that attended the wedding forty years ago.

M'CLELLAND L. T. L. ENTERTAINED WEDNESDAY

The McClelland L. T. L., with mothers of the members entertained the families of the W. C. T. U. very pleasantly at the Gladys Community House, Wednesday evening. A bountiful cafeteria dinner was served, after which Mrs. Mary Conley gave an interesting talk of her visit to the resting place of American soldiers in Flanders F. I. ds.

The evening was interspersed with music by the McClelland Y. P. B. Orchestra. The program closed with the Lord's Prayer.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis Orr have come to Xenia from St. Louis, Mo., for an indefinite stay, while Mr. Orr is connected with the local offices of the Hoover and Allison Co. They made the trip here by motor.

Mrs. David S. Schureman will spend the week end in Columbus, with her sister-in-law, from Delaware.

Mr. Lester Fawcett, near Xenia, has gone to Jackson, Mich., where he has taken a position with the Bakelite Co.

The annual thank-offering meeting of the missionary society of the First Reformed Church will be held at the home of Mrs. J. A. Yoder, 432 N. Galloway St., Tuesday, November 9, at 2 o'clock.

Ladies Aid Society of Trinity M. E. Church, will hold the regular all-day meeting, Tuesday, at the church, with the third division, L. to R. inclusive in charge.

Mrs. Frank Bickett, Mrs. George L. White, Mrs. V. F. Brown, Mrs. George Eckerle and Mrs. George Street, of Trinity M. E. Church, attended the meeting of the West Ohio Conference, W. H. M. S., at Marion, Ohio, from Wednesday to Friday. Mrs. O. F. Reeves, Jamestown, also attended the convention. The delegates attended a pilgrimage to the Harding tomb and were conducted through the tomb after a service.

Mrs. M. B. Fuller, 33 E. Second St., submitted to a tonsilectomy at the offices of local physicians, Friday morning.

RICHLAND AID HOLDS NOVEMBER MEETING

The lovely country home of Mrs. Charles Hawkins on the Fairground Road, was the scene of the gathering of Richland Aid Society, for the November meeting Friday. Twenty members responded to roll call, Mrs. James Laurens, president, presiding.

Mrs. Compton lead the devotions and selections on the afternoon topic were read by Mrs. Lee Ferguson, Miss Mary Beam and Mrs. Ruth Lile. Mrs. Ersie Hutchison gave a violin solo. Contests featured the social hour, Mrs. Hutchison winning a prize.

Attractive decorations of autumn berries were used about the rooms. A delicious refreshment course was served by Mrs. Hawkins and her assistants, Mrs. Frank Johnson, Mrs. Lawrence Lile and Mrs. Peterson.

COMPLETE PLANS FOR PRESBYTERIAN BAZAAR

Plans were completed for the Christmas dinner and bazaar to be held at First Presbyterian Church, December 9, at the meeting of the Presbyterian Ladies Aid Society, at the home of Mrs. Ray Cox, N. Galloway St., Friday afternoon.

About thirty attended the meeting. Mrs. Cox was assisted by Mrs. W. B. McCallister, Mrs. William Rieckels, Sr., and Mrs. William Rieckels, Jr. A refreshment course was served.

REPORT OF STATE CONVENTION GIVEN

An interestingly handled report of the state convention held at Steubenville, by Mrs. Anna Davis, delegate, was given at the meeting of Xenia W. C. T. U., at the home of Mrs. H. H. Hawkins, St. Detroit St., Friday.

Mrs. M. R. Snodgrass, state director of health of the W. C. T. U., gave a profitable and interesting talk on vitamins and how they build the body. Mrs. Curtis Merritt entertained the members with a piano solo.

MORE THAN $100,000 TO BE DISTRIBUTED IN XMAS SAVINGS

Early next month the annual Christmas buying season will be in full swing and during the forepart of December, Christmas Savings Club checks totalling more than $100,000 will be distributed by the Commercial and Savings Bank and Home Building and Savings Co., the only two local institutions having these departments.

Preparations are being completed by these institutions to mail out checks early next month, it was announced Saturday.

Both in number and size the accounts of the bank and the loan company are much larger than in 1925. There are a total of 2,500 accounts representing an investment of about $115,000.

A. E. Faulkner, cashier of the Commercial and Savings Bank, reports that the bank's accounts total 1,200 an investment of $55,000, showing an increase of about $5,000 over last year.

The Home Building and Savings Co. also recorded a substantial increase both in number and size of accounts. The accounts number 1,314 and total approximately $60,000. This is an increase of $7,000 over the 1925 record.

Distribution of the accounts will be made between December 1 and 10 to allow investors time in which to do their "Christmas shopping early" and avoid the annual rush of buyers.

The Christmas Savings Club plan will be continued again next year by both financial houses.

FIRE LOSS HEAVY

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 6.—Fire of the plant of the Teachout Sash, Door and Glass Company here today caused a loss in excess of $300,000. Fireman Fred Walter fell eight feet, breaking a leg, while aiding in fighting the flames. Origin of the fire has not been determined.

RICH BELLE WORKS TO PAY FINE

VIRGINIA CRUMBLISS

Exclusive Dispatch, Copyright, 1926 KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 5.—"I'm glad I did it, because I'm learning something." So says Virginia Crumbliss, aristocratic Tennesseean, who went to work in a candy store at a small wage.

She is earning money to pay the $10 fine which Judge R. P. Williams in city court ordered she must pay for speeding in her sport roadster. Miss Crumbliss had been before the judge previously, charged with speeding. And her father, James G. Crumbliss, former United States marshal for East Tennessee, former city commissioner, former postmaster of Kingston, well known business man and owner of extensive farm lands, had admonished his daughter that if he again had to pay her fine for speeding that he would take the automobile away from her. So Miss Crumbliss, arrested and fined, went to work to save her car.

The roadster takes her to the store every morning. A friend is her employer, Nathan Kuhlman, Jr., who is also popular with the young society set, is manager of the store; and he and Miss Crumbliss have appeared together in local amateur plays.

Four thousand three hundred and seventy-four voters of Greene County registered their wish and will for the now announced Library District. The 1742 majority verified the prediction that the measure would carry two to one, and the congratulatory tinge-dingling of telephones over the county attest the joy of a generous progressive citizenry. Even some whose wayward pencil put a cross before the forbidding "no" are swelling the chorus of rejoicing with, "Oh, I knew it would go over with a bang!"

The Board of Governors is taking the proper legal steps for the speedy establishment of the Library District.

The members of the Library Board financed the campaign by personal contributions to the fund, but they wish to bear witness to the fact that the real support came from the co-operation of public spirited citizens. The press of city and village have been heralds of library interests for the past year. Mr. Chew has been unstinted in the use of Gazette columns, in addition to a donation toward campaign expenses.

Mr. Findlay Torrence donated 5,000 window cards; Mr. Geo. Eckerle, sample ballots; Mr. Sigle, attractive highway posters, that gave impetus to flagging zeal and purpose. The response of merchants with trucks and delivery wagons to bear signs and slogans so overwhelmed the committee, Mesdames Messenger, Graham, Little, and Hale, that Messrs. Robert Kingsbury, Karl Babb and a group of H. S. boys, Routzong, Little, Early, and Harris, came to their aid. Special appreciation is felt for Miss Helen Currier's library play, "How To Read." Theaters over the county displayed slides encouraging the project.

Mrs. Lucille Fay gave generously of her time in sending out literature.

I attempt to thank the ministry and other enthusiastic workers over the county would be superfluous if not presumptuous. The Gazette might not spare room for such a long list of agents of civilization. So all who worked, all who voted, all who wish they had voted for our Greene County Library District salute each other with mutual congratulations.

The triumph of the Library cause is happily followed by the National Education Week beginning November 7, and the National Children's Book Week beginning November 14.

Miss Helen Currier's play, "What We Read," that has been given in various communities during the past month, will feature a

SUES ON NOTE

BUDGETS FOR CHEST CAMPAIGN OFFERED AT COMMITTEE MEET

Detailed budgets of the Red Cross and Social Service League for the coming fiscal year upon which will be based the goal of the Community Chest campaign to be conducted this month, were submitted at the first organizational meeting of the chest auxiliary committee at the city hall commission chamber Thursday night.

It was decided at the session to divide the city into five sections for canvassing purposes.

The budgets of the two agencies that will participate in the drive this year, must meet with the approval of the chest executive committee. Chairman C. S. Frazer expects to call a meeting of the committee early next week for the purpose of discussing the budgets recommending any changes that are thought necessary.

The budgets will then be submitted to the chest's auxiliary committee composed of thirty-four members, who will also pass upon figures. This committee will have actual charge of naming sub-committees and making all the necessary arrangements to begin the campaign of solicitation.

No definite date for the drive has been fixed.

MIRRORS OF PARIS

Exclusive Dispatch, Copyright, 1926 PARIS, Nov. 6.—The Bal de l'Internat by all accounts must have been what the lads call "rough." The Bal de l'Internat in the annual orgy of the medical students and internes and in respect of daring Quat-z-Arts given by the artistic fraternities earlier in the year.

This year the Internat was held in Bal Bullier, oldest of the Latin quarter revel centers, which is situated just opposite the Cafe Closerie des Lilas which readers of Tribby will remember as the place Sven-gali used to take Tribby for her evening aperitif.

Costume, or lack of it, was obligatory, and most of the students represented something to do with medicine or surgery. Some went as surgical instruments; others as portions of the anatomy; and these last were not among the least daring.

Each hospital or school had its own booth or "clinic" in the hall and some of these were fixed up as operating rooms. A student of the Ecoles Centrales came, in fact, costumed as an appendicitis operation. There were plenty of humorous references to Dr. Serge Voronoff's celebrated monkey-glands and the Hotel Dieu (which isn't God's hotel, but the city hospital).

One in procession leading a huge baboon on one chain and on another an effigy of the most venerable professor of the faculty apparently in the last stages of senility. Later during the evening he was "rejuvenated" and celebrated the occasion by dancing a Charleston.

While nurses were not permitted to be present there were plenty of ladies, friends of students. In the course of the evening the internes elected their "Queen," who turned out to be the incredibly old and amazingly wrinkled woman who sells flowers on the Cite side of the Pont Neuf bridge.

This triumph of age over pulchritude was hailed with derision and the ball ended at 7 a. m. with the students giving the baboon swimming lessons in the Seine.

Recipe for Married Harmony. Captain French strolled into town the other day, his wife the famous and delightful Ida, having gone back to America a few weeks ago with Fanny Ward.

A most charming couple. The captain is a rich tea merchant and Ida—well, you know who Ida is. They get along together better than any married couple I have ever known. This may, of course, be because the Atlantic ocean seems to be between them.

DODGE POPULARITY REACHES PINNACLE WITH COUPE MODEL

"Every day sees more and more people coming into our showroom to look at the special coupe," said Fred S. Johnston, local Dodge Brothers dealer, commenting on the many improvements which Dodge Brothers have made recently.

"People in all walks of life are driving it," Mr. Johnston continued. "Women, students, and everybody who wants an attractive car with an intimate atmosphere about it—and yet dependable, uninterrupted service."

"Improvements have been made in the motor which give it a new smoothness and snap of performance. The car has a quick get-away in traffic, and is easy to park. That feature has great appeal to women especially. The two-unit starter makes starting easy even in the coldest weather."

"The body has a grace of line accentuated by the dark green lacquer finish. Unobstructed vision is made possible by the one-piece windshield and slender pillars of the improved all steel body. Long underslung springs and large balloon tires give exceptional riding comfort. The entire interior of the car, too, reflects discriminating taste."

"It really is not surprising, when you consider the low price, that these refinements and improvements have made the special coupe so popular."

STUDEBAKER MODEL SCORES SUCCESS AT ENGLISH AUTO SHOW

Another record breaking success was scored by the Erskine Six, Studebaker's new two and one-third litre car, at the Olympia Show in London, according to cables received by A. R. Erskine, president of The Studebaker Corporation of America.

"The showing of the Erskine car created the biggest sensation of any new models at Olympia," cabled L. J. Oller, managing director of Studebaker of Great Britain, Limited, London. "Our stands are crowded from early morning until close of show. Dealers enthusiastic and I confidently predict that we will sell ten thousand Erskines in 1927. We congratulate you all on the marvelous product."

The success of Studebaker's export car at the Olympia Show follows its triumphant introduction earlier in October at the Paris Salon, where for the first time in the history of this international motor car exposition an American car proved to be the sensation of the Salon.

In London as in Paris the Erskine Six struck the keynote of a new trend in motoring. Exhibits at the big Olympia Show indicated that overseas drivers are demanding the standard of power and comfort afforded by the American car with its superior pick up, pulling power and flexibility. The same swing toward the added power and flexibility of six cylinder cars that was evident at the Paris Salon was noted at the big British show, where the Erskine Six, as the only American car combining these qualities, with the compactness and economy required by overseas motorists, condition repeating the success of its first appearance in Paris.

EUROPEAN AND SOUTH AMERICAN GOVERNMENT BONDS STRONGER

Merits Of Foreign Issues Discussed By Financial Expert—Investments Yield Less Than U. S. Offerings

By FRED R. RIPLEY
Special Financial Writer of EFS
and The Daily Gazette
Copyright 1926 (EFS)

One of the questions most often asked by the growing number of laymen investors is, "Are foreign government bonds a good buy?" A reliable answer must be given circumspectly.

There has been marked improvement in the economic conditions of practically all the countries whose government bonds are outstanding in the United States.

The progress of European countries in this respect is a matter of almost daily report. Today the budgets of all the more important Continental countries are actually balanced except those of Belgium and France. The currencies of Great Britain, Switzerland, Sweden, Holland, Norway, Denmark and Germany have been brought back to par.

The currencies of Austria, Hungary, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, and Finland have been definitely stabilized. While some further work in this field has yet to be done, the situation is incomparably better than it was five years ago.

South American republics have been making similar progress, both in the financial conditions of the governments and in the economic positions of the countries. The currencies of Argentina and Uruguay have been on a gold basis for many years, and in the last five years central banks more or less of American model, have been established in Colombia, Brazil, Chile and Peru definitely established on the gold basis.

Upon progress already made, the American market's appraisal of the credit of governments has been raised and the prices of their bonds in our markets have advanced, despite the constant influx of new issues for the same countries.

Prior to the war America had few offerings of foreign bonds. These few mostly represented merely participation in a British loan. But the offerings in 1919 and 1920 of foreign bonds originated by American bankers really signalled the introduction of foreign securities to this market.

The purchase of these securities then and since has been, in general, a most satisfactory investment. The current income return has been high compared with that from other classes of bonds and the price appreciation on the whole has been substantial.

Factors That Rule Bonds.

In the mind of an investor, the desirability of any bond is determined, first by the comparative safety or security of the bond, and secondly, by the size of the return it makes over a given period. As to security, the larger proportion of foreign bonds held in this country are the obligations of national or state government, and this class of bond constitutes the safest of all forms of investment.

It is not yet generally realized in this country how well assured is the payment of principal and interest of foreign government bonds. In the thirty years before the war the average total of all government bonds outstanding was $32,500,000,000 of which less than four-tenths of one per cent on the average were in default.

In the same period the bonds of American industrial corporations were in default to the extent of 2.7 per cent and the bonds of American railroads to 1.85 per cent. Even during the difficult years that have passed since the war the percentage of foreign government bonds listed on the London stock exchange which were in default was only 1.6 per cent, not including Russian government bonds.

Even where default occurs on foreign government bonds a loss of principal or any part of it is rare. Almost always within a comparatively short time an adjustment of the debt is made which gives the bondholders their interest and principal in full.

Naturally the obligations of the various governments are not of equal value in the market any more than those of railroads or municipalities. In some cases this is due to the provisions of issue of certain bonds which establish a special value, or restrain an upward movement beyond a certain figure.

The most important factor, however, is the market credit of the issuing government, and this is based largely on the estimate of the degree of security behind the bond, that is, the proportion of resources of all kinds to the amount of the obligation. Fundamentally this is what fixes the yields at which foreign bonds sell. This degree of security is estimated chiefly from a consideration of a number of indices of the financial position of the government and the economic position of its country. As regards the first, the most important index is the statement of revenue and expenditure of the government.

Sound finance requires that the ordinary budget should balance, that is, the normal and regular expenditures in each year should be covered by revenues from regular and permanent sources.

Extraordinary expenditures, if met from the proceeds of loans, should be for productive purposes only, that is, for investment in undertakings which will themselves produce the revenue necessary for the service of the loans made to finance them.

Another point is that charges for interest and sinking fund on the government's debt should not absorb too much, perhaps not more than 25 per cent of the ordinary revenues, unless the debt represents in part investment in self-supporting properties.

How Credit Is Determined.

If the government has borrowed to build and acquire railroads and port works, or to establish monopolies or other revenue-producing enterprises, and if these enterprises earn their quota of the debt charges the proportion of debt charges to revenue may safely run higher than 25 per cent, because the charges made for the services rendered by these enterprises are not in the nature of taxation. In this case the country's industry and commerce would have to pay them in any case, no matter who owned the enterprises.

The credit standing of any government's obligations, however, is influenced as much by the economic position of its country as by the financial condition of the government itself. Provision of the means to pay external debt involves not only a budgetary problem, but the problem of creating balances in foreign currency sufficient to provide the amount required for the discharge of the foreign obligations.

This is the so-called "problem of transfer" which has been so prominent in recent years in discussions of reparations payments, interrelated debts and the like.

The economic position of a country, so far as concerns the question of transfer, may be determined readily by analysis of the figures of its balance of trade, the relation between the value of its imports and the value of its exports. It is the value of surplus of exports over imports that is available for the payment of foreign obligations.

Exchange Improving.
The world market is becoming more stabilized and demand for goods in particular lines from various countries is on a smoother basis. These two things are building up export demand for nearly all countries and is bringing the value of exports over imports to a better level.

These conditions are finding a reflection in the prices and valuations of foreign bonds. In this country, but on a yield basis these foreign bond prices are still far below those of domestic securities.

Progress and Approval

For Dodge Brothers, Inc., 1926 already stands out on the calendar as a year of unprecedented progress and success.

From January to date sales have exceeded any previous year's total by a margin at once impressive and significant.

New engineering records have been established by a succession of major improvements extending back to the first of the year.

Never has Dodge Brothers Motor Car ranked so high in public favor. Never before has it so richly deserved the world's good will.

CHEVROLET TRUCKS HELP MAKE MOVIES FOR ROACH STUDIOS

Sometimes only one car will do! Out in the motion picture sanctuaries of California, where money genius and picturesque country unite to provide romantic and thrilling screen stories, the automobile is handed most strenuous assignments.

The motor car frequently gives its star performance behind the screen—unknown to the millions of movie-goers, who are often unaware of the vital contribution which the automobile has made to the making of the picture.

When the motion picture director sets out to make a western film, the transportation department is confronted with the gigantic task of getting the entire company with all of their paraphernalia out to the great open spaces.

Use of motor cars and trucks has made possible filming pictures in backgrounds that have the authentic atmosphere of the Old West.

Year by year, motion picture men declare, it is becoming necessary to go farther afield to secure new and unspoiled scenic effects.

Hal Roach, of the studios which bear his name, recently established a permanent camp at the Big Horn ranch near Moapa, Nev., as a headquarters for the use of his production companies when engaged in making western pictures.

A marked absence of roads is one of the chief beauties of the surrounding country from the standpoint of the directors but the transportation department found it very difficult to establish communication to many of the localities chosen, where the dry bed of sand was the best possible substitute for a highway to be found.

"After various types of motor vehicles had been tried," says Hal Roach, "a Chevrolet truck was purchased. It proved so completely satisfactory that four more were added and the fleet of five has since, time and again, proved its ability to go anywhere and back again through the roadless desert around the Big Horn ranch.

"For personal transportation I invariably use a Chevrolet. On my first trip to the Big Horn ranch, I set out in a larger car. In the first heavy sand encountered the larger car tore out the rear axle and I finished the trip in a Chevrolet.

"Now many of the other executives of the Roach studios employ Chevrolets for their excursions into the country where men are men and automobiles must be real cars."

OCTOBER INCREASE IN PAIGE-JEWETT SHIPMENTS IS HIGH

DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 6.—A 60 per cent increase in shipments for October as compared with the same month in 1925, is reported by the Paige-Jewett Motor Car Company. The total shipments last month were 3150 cars, both Paiges and Jewetts. This total is not only in excess of last year's figures but is 9 per cent higher than the company's best previous October in 1922, when 2887 cars were shipped.

October's gain over September was 14 per cent. The Paige factory is now in full production, after delays incidental to the changing of its lines and the procuring of new bodies in quantity. It is now manufacturing three new series of cars, the Jewett 6-45, the Paige 6-65, and the Paige 6-75, with a price range for five different models of five-passenger closed cars from $1195 to $1695.

The company recently discontinued the practice of turning out both "standard" and "de luxe" types of the same model and all its cars are of finish, appointments, and equipment that would have rated them in the de luxe class under the former plan. The change was made because the company's sales records showed that the American buyer now demands, in addition to mechanical excellence the utmost in style and comfort.

Xenia Paige-Jewett Co., sells these cars in Greene County.

BITUMINOUS COAL CONFERENCE WILL STUDY DATA ON FUEL

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 6.—German scientists who lead the world in coal research and the production of fuel oil from soft coal will lay their information before the International Conference on Bituminous Coal, called here for November 15, President Thomas S. Baker, of Carnegie Institute of Technology, sponsor of the conference, said today.

Methods and processes evolved by Dr. Friedrich Bergius and Prof. Franz Fischer, the German delegates, will be carefully considered by the conference in its effort to arrive at an economical solution of soft coal problems, Baker declared.

Even France and England, which also will be represented at the conference, have made far more progress with their coal problems than the United States, it was pointed out, but this is because the foreign countries have not the wealth of petroleum available to this country.

Petroleum Problems
Because of the scarcity of petroleum existing for years in the European countries they attacked the problems of producing fuel oil from coal while the United States was enjoying the benefits of a natural supply of petroleum, but Carnegie Institute officials point out that the knowledge that our oil supply is limited has caused an awakening of American fuel technologists.

With the Bergin method the greater part of a given quantity of coal is converted into liquid fuel. A mixture of pulverized coal and petroleum is heated to a temperature of about 700 degrees Fahrenheit in an atmosphere of hydrogen under pressure. Under these conditions the greater part of the coal is converted into liquid products which may be separated into approximately one-third each of heavy gasoline, Diesel engine oil, and fuel oil.

Fischer, who is director of coal research at Mulheim-Ruhr, has made a liquid fuel oil which he calls "synthol" by heating water gas under similar high pressure in the presence of a catalytic material. "Synthol" is a mixture of alcohol, aldehydes and hydrocarbons. It already has been used successfully in automobile engines as a substitute for gasoline, according to reports.

Make Alcohol From Coal
Scarcely less widely known than Bergius and Fischer is Gen. Georges Patart, of Paris, who has invented a process for making alcohol from coal. He will represent France at the conference.

England's delegation includes Dr. C. H. Lander, director of fuel research of the Department of Scientific and Industrial Research. Dr. R. Lessing, fuel technologist, Geoffrey M. Gill, consulting engineer and gas specialist, and Harold Nielson, inventor of the L. & N. process.

What the United States can offer in helping solve the problem of a waning petroleum supply will be presented by a large number of American engineers and scientists who have made important investigations and invented successful processes.

While the problem of obtaining fuel oil from soft coal probably will receive the most attention the conference will be split up into special sessions at intervals, for the discussion of such problems as the complete gasification of coal, high temperature distillation, coal tar products, power and fertilizers, it was announced. The smokeless fuel problem of big cities also will be given a prominent place on the agenda.

MONTHLY BUDGET OF $23 WILL PROVIDE FOOD FOR COUPLE

BERKELEY, Cal., Nov. 6.—Appetizing wholesome meals, amply sufficient to satisfy the wants of any married couple may be prepared on a budget allowing $23 a month for food, according to Dr. Ruth Okey, professor of household science in the University of California.

This allowance is a proven practicability, Dr. Okey states, and was actually put into effect by a young married woman student. It was necessary that she practice rigid economy in order that she and her husband might finish their studies, and this budget did the work.

The basis of the system lies in a proportionately large allowance for fresh fruits and vegetables, while that for meats is comparatively small. Milk and eggs are allowed in abundance, and although the cheaper cuts of meat must be used, it is easy to cook them attractively, Dr. Okey says.

"What one married couple can do, can be done by others," the household scientist declares. If those in charge of devising the family budget would watch the expenditures for food, money could be saved and used for other necessities or luxuries.

Pledge to the Public on Used Car Sales

1 All used cars offered to the public shall be honestly represented.

If a car is suitable only for a mechanic who can rebuild it, or for someone who expects only a few months' rough usage on a camping trip, it must be sold on that basis. Each car must be sold for just what it is.

2 All Studebaker automobiles which are sold as CERTIFIED CARS have been properly reconditioned, and carry a 30-day guarantee for replacement of defective parts and free service on adjustments.

This is possible because tremendous reserve mileage has been built into every Studebaker, which it is impossible to exhaust in years.

3 Every used car is conspicuously marked with its price in plain figures, and that price, just as the price of our new cars, is rigidly maintained.

The public can deal in confidence and safety only with the dealer whose policy is "one price only—the same price to all." For, to sell cars on this basis, every one of them must be honestly priced to begin with.

4 Every purchaser of a used car may drive it for five days, and then, if not satisfied for any reason, turn it back and apply the money paid as a credit on the purchase of any other car in stock—new or used.

It is assumed, of course, that the car has not been crashed up by collision or other accident in the meantime.

UNREVEALED WITNESS WILL CLINCH HALL-MILLS MURDER CASE FOR PROSECUTION IS RELIABLE PREDICTION MADE

By MARY BLADE

Exclusive Dispatch, Copyright, 1926 SOMERVILLE, N. J., Nov. 6. Alexander Simpson, special prosecutor, will introduce a mystery witness and heretofore unsuggested evidence to clinch his case against the defendants in the Hall-Mills case.

The prediction is being made upon confidential information obtained from a reliable and authoritative source. The evidence in question was obtained four years ago, at the time of the first investigation of the crime, and has been a secret since. It is of technical nature, and is calculated to be absolute and conclusive in its implications. At the proper moment it will be injected into the prosecution's case to demoralize the elaborate defense of the Hall-Stevens-Carpenter lawyers.

One other witness is going to take the stand in the Hall-Mills trial and introduce a new note of sensation. Which one will it be? Reporters and hangers-on at the trial are endeavoring to guess. Here are the possibilities:

MRS. JANE GIBSON—Owner of small pig farm near murder scene. Known as "The Pig Woman." Claims she was eye-witness to crime and places Mrs. Hall, Willie Stevens and Carpenter at or near the scene of slaying. Says she heard four shots and a woman's scream.

MRS. MINNA CLARK—Former member of choir, accused of spying on Dr. Hall and Mrs. Mills and held as accessory to murder.

RALPH V. M. GORSLINE—Vestryman in Dr. Hall's church. Was in Dr. Hall's lane night of the murder and says he heard four shots and screams, but did not see any participants in shooting.

MISS CATHERINE RASTALL—Member of church choir, who says she was Gorsline's companion on night of murder. It may be proven, however, that she was not Gorsline's companion that evening.

ROBERT ERLING—Former farm hand, who says he saw Mrs. Gibson in Dr. Hall's lane on night of murder.

HENRY L. DICKMAN—Former New Jersey state trooper, who disappeared after extensive investigations in murder case. Found this year in Alcatraz military prison, San Francisco, and brought back to New Jersey. Claims he was given a bribe to leave the state.

JAMES MILLS—Husband of slain woman and sexton of Dr. Hall's church. Asked his wife where she was going on night of murder and she replied, "Follow me and find out." Claims he suspected "nothing wrong" between his wife and Dr. Hall.

CHARLOTTE MILLS—Daughter of Mrs. Mills. Tells of mother's friendship for Dr. Hall and quotes mother as expressing fear of Mrs. Hall.

BARBARA TOUGH—Former upstairs maid in Hall home. Tells of Mrs. Hall's activities after murder of rector and quotes gossip concerning Dr. Hall and Mrs. Mills.

MRS. LOUISE GEIST RIEHL—Former maid in Hall home. Supplements Miss Tough's testimony and tells of telephone call Dr. Hall received on night of murder.

RAYMOND SCHNEIDER—Country youth who found bodies while on mushroom picking expedition.

MISS PEARL BAHMER—Schneider's companion at time bodies were found.

FERD A. DAVID—Middlesex County detective active in investigation four years ago. Has been assisted by present authorities for conduct of that investigation.

REV. PAUL F. V. HAMBORZ-SKY—Hungarian clergyman who says years before murder Dr. Hall told him Henry Stevens had threatened his life if he did not give up association with Mrs. Mills.

PETER TUMULTY—Former gardener in Hall home. Has been questioned at length about pruning shears used while he was working for Mrs. Hall. State attempted to bring out that Mrs. Mills' throat may have been lacerated with such shears.

MRS. LEO HARKENS—Members of Dr. Hall's congregation, who saw Dr. Hall and Mrs. Mills on way to fatal tryst. Says latter carried package which might have contained love letters found near bodies.

FELIX DI MARTINI—New York private detective engaged by counsel for Mrs. Hall four years ago and now accused of having been an accessory after the fact by intimidating state's witnesses.

NELLIE RUSSELL—Negress, who told grand jury that Mrs. Gibson was at her shack at time latter claimed she was in Dr. Hall's lane.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS—Night watchman formerly employed by New Jersey State College for women, who says he saw a woman entering Hall grounds around 2:30 o'clock on the morning following murder.

CHARLES ALPAUGH—Former bus driver, who saw small sedan

What eastern football experts claim to be the worst game ever put up by a team wearing the Eli colors was displayed on October 20, 1915, when the Blue was trampled under Larry Bankhart's Colgate machine, 15 to 0.

As one critic said after the humiliation: "Yale has a team that would be a fair small college eleven—and not so fair at that."

The Colgate players kept the leather constantly in Yale territory and it was only owing to the fact that Colgate had no point kicker that the score did not assume more one-sided proportions. Certainly Yale was outclassed more than the count indicates.

Scoville was the only Yale man to rise above mediocrity. It was mainly through his efforts that the Eli made six first downs during the afternoon.

BOY PAROLED AFTER PLEADING GUILTY TO TWO INDICTMENTS

Pleading guilty to indictments for burglary and larceny and grand larceny, Raymond Chambliss was sentenced to serve terms of one to fifteen years and one to seven years in the Ohio State Reformatory at Mansfield and then paroled in the custody of his father, George Chambliss, Friday in Common Pleas Court.

His parole was granted upon his promise to make restitution to Frank Hughes for $40 in connection with the theft of forty-eight cans of patching rubber, oil and one auto tire from his warehouse on Dayton Ave., August 19; and to Edward Huff for participation with two others in the theft of a $75 tarpaulin August 19.

Prosecutor J. Carl Marshall entered a nolle prosequi on a third indictment against Chambliss for burglary and larceny. He was also suspected of complicity in the theft of forty-five chickens from Alva Riley August 21.

MINOR CHANGES CLARIFY RULES FOR BASKETBALL GUIDE SHOWS

Only minor changes have been made in the basketball rules for the 1926-27 season, as adopted by committees representing the National Collegiate Athletic Association, the Young Men's Christian Association and the Amateur Athletic Union.

The rules and sections affected are:

Rule 1, Section 3.—A diameter is to be drawn in the center circle parallel to the end lines. The purpose of this is to denote the part of the circle belonging to each player.

Rule 4, Section 1.—An air pressure of thirteen pounds is recommended as a satisfactory inflation for the ball. This applies to the valve ball which permits the use of an air gauge.

Rule 6, Section 6.—If an injury takes place while the ball is in play, the officials are to withhold their whistles until a play has been completed. The section explains what is meant by "time out." Of course, the captain of the team in possession of the ball can obtain "time out" immediately under the privilege given him in Rule 11, Section 1. The purpose of this change is to prevent the officials from "killing" a play because of an apparent injury which often has no effect upon the play itself.

Rule 6, Section 7.—The umpire is given authority to disqualify players for flagrant unsportsmanlike conduct.

Rule 8, Section 5.—Each center player shall stand with both feet on or inside the half of the center circle. That is, the center is no longer required to stand with his feet entirely inside the circle, but each foot is "in a legal position if any part of it touches the arc, or if it is entirely inside the arc. Neither foot, however, should touch the diameter.

Rule 11, Section 1—"Time out" shall not be granted for a substitution or at the request of a captain after the ball is in position for one or more free throws. Such "time out" may be granted between the calling of the foul and taking it to the free throw line, but not thereafter until the throw or throws have been taken, whereupon the old rule governs. In case of free throws awarded to both teams, "time out" may be granted while the ball is being taken from one free throw line to the other.

Rule 13, Section 6.—An attempt is made to word this section more clearly and a new ruling is inserted. If two or more free throws are awarded to the same team, at least one of which is for a personal foul, the ball is in play if the last free throw is missed. For instance, a foul is called upon a player for holding and immediately thereafter a technical foul is called upon the same player for delaying the game. The general rule that the ball goes to center after a free throw following a technical foul does not apply here, but the ball is in play if the last free throw is missed. If free throws are awarded both teams, of course the ball goes to center after the last free throw.

Rule 14, Section II (a)—Center ball instead of nearer free throw line.

Rule 15, Section 13, Penalty (a)—If a player is fouled in the act of throwing for goal, the goal counts if made. The clause, "if the ball is in play," is deleted.

BOSTON IS SEEKING NATIONAL AIRPORT TITLE IS REPORTED

BOSTON, Nov. 6.—Development of Boston as a port for airplanes, in trips to Europe, has received added impetus with the recent boost given the city by Anthony Fokker, inventor and builder of the Byrd North Pole airplane.

The belief that Boston is the gateway to the air, and is the logical starting point in the East for all trans-Atlantic flights, has long been held by Boston men interested in the future of aviation. Fokker has upheld this belief and steps are under way to make the Hub the chief point of embarkation for Europe via the air.

A design which will effectively designate the Boston Airport is now being planned by army officials attached here. The design will be such that it can easily be seen from the air at a great height and thus identify them as from the Boston port.

Flights from Boston to Europe will be via Newfoundland and will take 50 hours, according to calculations of the army of the city. Capt. Horace N. Nelson, U. S. A. commander of the Boston Airport is prominent in the advancement of airplane facilities in Boston. He with others interested in the firm in the belief that eventually the planes that will leave the shores of Massachusetts for Europe will be as safe as earthly vehicles and will be luxuriously fitted.

SIX CANDIDATES REPORT EXPENSES

Six successful Republican candidates for county office at the November 2 election, have filed their required campaign expense accounts with Earl Short, clerk of the board of elections.

Expense statements of County Auditor R. O. Wead, County Commissioner Herman W. Eavey and Clerk of Courts Harvey Elam show these candidates contributed $25, $20 and $25 in the order named to the Republican Campaign Committee but no other disbursements or receipts are filed.

Miss Helen I. Dadds, treasurer-elect, Prosecutor J. Carl Marshall and Omer Tate, sheriff-elect, filed blank statements showing no receipts, disbursements or submissions.

All candidates for county office at the general election are required to file individual campaign expense statements within ten days after the election.

HONEY LOU

by Beatrice Burton
author of "LOVE SONG" and "HER MAN" ETC.

© JOHNSON FEATURES INC. 1926

READ THIS FIRST:
HONEY LOU HUNTLEY is private secretary to old "GRUMPY" WALLACK, head of the Wallack Fabric Mills.

"Grumpy" hired Honey Lou not only because she is quick and clever, but because she is a good-tempered and sweet girl who is having her around. So does everyone else at the mills, from the office vamp, ANN LUDLOW, to JOE MEADOWS, the shipping clerk. But Honey Lou is afraid of Joe Meadows, without quite knowing why.

One afternoon Honey Lou meets JACK WALLACK, "Grumpy's" son and heir. She falls in love with him, secretly and violently, and she with her. But when he drives Honey Lou home and kisses her she slaps his face. Later he comes to her home, and apologizes.

"Home" to Honey Lou is the little flat where she lives with her old-fashioned mother and her half-sister, MARGRET MOODY.

The next day young Wallack starts work at the mills. Ann Ludlow tells Honey Lou he is there to learn the business, so he can take it over when his father retires. He comes to Honey Lou late in the afternoon, in dirty overalls, and asks her to meet him at the corner and drive home with him. She refuses to meet on the street corner, and that night when she leaves the office she finds him waiting for her outside. He is talking to a beautiful blond girl who is sitting in a closed automobile that is drawn up to the curb. Honey Lou wonders who the girl is, and what she is doing there at that hour.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER V
HONEY LOU could see that the other girl's eyes never left her as she crossed the muddy sidewalk to Jack Wallack's side.

"Well, here I am!" she said, looking up at him and laughing a little breathlessly.

"Yes, and ten minutes late, too," he added. His quick smile flashed out as he took her by the arm and gave her a shake.

"Angela," he turned toward the girl who silently watched them from the window of her car, "I want you to know Miss Honey Lou Huntley, who is my dad's special guardian angel down here at the mills."

He looked from one to the other of the two bright faces. "Miss Allen, too," he explained to Honey Lou.

"She often comes down here to get him and take him home," Honey Lou told her.

But for the life of her she could not remember ever having seen this beautiful smiling person before, in all the six months she had worked for "Grumpy."

Are you sure she often comes down here?" she asked Jack when they were in his car and were driving down between the lamp posts of Exchange street.

"She's so beautiful that I'd surely remember her. I'd ever seen her before. She's the loveliest-looking thing I ever laid my eyes on."

"Isn't she?" Jack agreed with enthusiasm, and a hot little pang of jealousy shot through Honey Lou's heart.

She looked at him sharply. Just how well did he know this Angela Allen, with her hair and face and her little white dress?

Just how much did she attract him, Honey Lou wondered.

And while she was wondering, Jack Wallack answered the unspoken questions that poured into her mind like waters through a flood-gate.

"My dad always calls Angela 'Angel,'" he said, as the car turned into Chester row with its blank-looking buildings, all shut up for the night.

"Is she as good as all that?" asked Honey Lou. She gave him a quick sideways look and saw that he was nodding his head.

"She surely is," he answered seriously. "She spends most of her time doing nice things for people who need to have nice things done for them. Goes down to Holy Cross hospital once a week to tell stories to the sick little kids there—and all that sort of thing, you know."

"Holy Cross hospital," Honey Lou repeated, "why, that's where Margaret, my half-sister, works. She's in the office there—"

She broke off suddenly and gave a soft, husky little laugh.

"Isn't it the funniest thing?" she asked, turning her eager face up to his in the darkness, "we don't know a single thing about each other, do we?"

But here we are riding along together as if we were the best friends in the world! I wonder what your Miss Allen thought tonight when she saw me get into this car with you."

"Nothing at all, probably," the man at her side said, "but if she did think anything of it, it was sure to be something pretty nice. Angela never had an unkind thought about anybody in her life. She's just plain good, through and through. The Head says that—"

"Who's 'The Head,' for goodness sake?" Honey Lou asked.

"My mother," he laughed. "My dad and I always call her that. He may be the big noise down at the mills, but at home it's my mother who runs things. I'd like you to meet my mother, Honey Lou. She's a wonder."

One of his hands left the wheel of the car and groped for hers. "Honey Lou," he said again. But she drew back into her corner of the seat.

"Don't do that!" she cried sharply. "Please keep your hands on the wheel and your eyes on the road, or first thing you know you'll be trying to wrestle a telegraph pole or a street car or something."

She said nothing more until the long black roadster swung into Arbor street. But she was thinking her own thoughts and they were gloomy ones.

"That yellow-headed girl is in love with him," she told herself unhappily, remembering the chilly glance that Angela Allen had sent her from the open window of her car, "and if he thinks she's so wonderful, why hasn't he married her long ago?"

She was going to ask herself that question a good many times during the weeks that followed.

"Have you known this Angel person very long?" she asked, when the black roadster slid to a standstill before her own door.

"Ever since I can remember,"

Jack Wallack said in a matter-of-fact voice, "she lives next door to us, and she's always at our house."

Honey Lou leaned over and opened the door of the car.

"She's awfully pretty and I suppose she's just as nice as you say she is," she observed, getting out and standing beside the machine.

"But she's awfully cold-looking. Isn't she?—Blondes always are, I think."

The man in the car made a low sound in his throat. It was halfway between a snort and a chuckle and it might have meant anything.

He jumped out and stood beside her. "I'll take you up to your door," he said, and he followed the girl up the narrow, dimly-lit flight of steps that led to the second-floor flat where she lived.

The door at the head of the stairs opened as they came up and Mrs. Huntley stood in the path of mellow light that streamed out from the room behind her.

She had on a blue-patterned dress of soft challis and her graying hair was piled high on her head in a queenly pompadour.

Honey Lou was very proud of her as she stood there, fine-looking and every inch a lady, with a welcoming smile on her face.

"My mother—Mr. Wallack," she introduced them, and then added: "Mr. Wallack drove me home from the office tonight."

"That was very kind of you, I'm sure," Mr. Wallack said. He mother said in her soft southern voice: "It always worries me to have Honey Lou out alone, after dark—especially down in that awful neighborhood where the mills are."

She put an arm around the girl's slender waist and Jack Wallack realized suddenly that it was a tragedy to this gentle-faced, low-voiced woman to have her daughter go to the mills to earn her daily bread.

He had a new and startling impression of Honey Lou. Before that moment, he had thought of her simply as a girl who worked in his father's office, the prettiest girl he had ever clapped his eyes on, and the most desirable. But, as he saw her now in her home setting, he realized that she had been brought up as carefully as any of the girls of his world and that she could not be treated lightly by a man any more than those girls could be treated lightly. She was no plaything for anybody. She was too fine for that.

They made a bright picture—the mother and daughter—as they stood there in the doorway of their little flat and said goodnight to him. And it was a picture that stayed in his mind all the way home to his father's big comfortable white house in Summit street.

The lights of his car flashed across the lawn as he turned into the wide driveway and showed him the figure of Angela Allen just going up the front steps of the house. She turned when she saw him and waved her hand. She was still standing on the porch, waiting for him, when he came around from the garage.

"You got to miss Honey Lou home safe and sound?" she asked, as they went into the house together. "That's the funniest name I ever heard in my life—Honey Lou. It sounds more like a breakfast food or a stick of cheap candy than a girl."

She laughed gently. But Jack Wallack did not even smile. "Angel," he said, "that's the first catty thing I ever heard you say in my life."

It was just ten days later—on a Saturday afternoon—that Honey Lou heard from Angela Allen.

She came home from the mills at five o'clock, to find a letter for her lying on the table in the sitting room of the flat.

"It looks like a wedding announcement, doesn't it?" she asked her mother as she tore open the thick white envelope.

"But it isn't," she murmured, skimming it with her eye. "It's from Angela Allen. She wants me to come to her house for dinner next Saturday night. It's Jack Wallack's birthday, she says. I suppose she's having a party. But I'm not going. I don't know her or any of the people who would be there."

Mrs. Huntley took the letter out of her hands and read it.

"Why of course you're going to go," she said firmly. "It's your chance to meet the kind of people I want you to know. And, of course, Jack Wallack has asked this Miss Allen to invite you. You've got to go, Honey Lou."

Honey Lou's eyes were thoughtful as she went into the bedroom. On Saturday afternoons, she and Margaret stopped work earlier than usual and they always spent the extra time in doing all the little things that they were too busy to do during the week. The flat became, for the time, a beauty shop and sewing room, where they shampooed their hair, manicured their nails and mended and pressed their few clothes.

Margaret was sitting in the little white bedroom now, drying her dark hair in front of the electric heater. She had a Turkish towel around her shoulders, and above it her rather plain face was grave and dreamy.

"Hello, Honey," she said, when the younger girl came in and tossed her wraps down upon the foot of her bed. "I asked Steve Mayhew about your friend, Angela Allen, today. He says she comes down to the hospital about once a month to tell stories. She's supposed to come every Wednesday afternoon, but I suppose she's too busy."

Honey Lou scarcely heard her. Her mind was still on the letter. "Read this, Margaret, and tell me what you think of it." She held it out to her.

"Why, I think it's a perfectly lovely invitation," Margaret said, when she had read it. "You're going to go, aren't you?"

Honey Lou shrugged her shoulders. "I haven't anything to wear," she sighed—the old, old plaint of womankind.

She crossed the room to the clothes closet and pulled a dress from its hanger, then flung it back on a hook.

"It doesn't seem fair, Margaret," she said, turning around from the closet, "that some girls should have everything they want and not even have to lift a hand to get it, does it?"

She sat down on the side of the bed and her shadowy eyes fixed themselves on the faded, flowery wallpaper. But she did not see it. Her vision was filled with the picture of a girl in black velvet and many strands of pearl beads. A girl with sunny hair and dove-colored eyes, who had looked coldly at her from the window of a great automobile.

"I wouldn't step inside of Angela Allen's house unless I looked like a million dollars," she declared. "Anything that I own is just an old dishrag compared to the clothes she wears. You just ought to see her, Margaret!"

"I don't have to see her," Margaret answered loyally. "I know that, no matter what she wears, she'll never be half as pretty as you are, Honey Lou. And if I were you, I'd certainly go to that party. I wouldn't let clothes stop me."

Honey Lou has her first taste of high life—and something else, too. Read about it in tomorrow's chapter.

WHOLE WHEAT BREAD AND CABBAGE URGED FOR NEBRASKA JAIL

HARTINGTON, Neb., Nov. 6.—Substitution of a whole wheat and cabbage diet in place of the bread and water served as punishment to violators of the dry laws, is urged upon County Judge Wilbur F. Bryant, of this place, in a letter received from Mrs. Della Ross, dietician at Bloomington, Ill. Mrs. Ross makes her plea on the grounds of health.

"If the diet of these prisoners is to be punishment," her letter reads, "almost any diet differing from their usual one, and taking away from them things that they like, would serve the purpose."

"To put them on a bread and water diet, however, is really inflicting double punishment, since this diet does not contain sufficient nourishment to maintain normal tissues of their bodies."

"It seems to me that the ends of justice would be met equally well, if, instead of this, a diet of whole wheat bread, a portion of raw or cooked cabbage and a glass of water, was substituted. This would still be punishment, but it would not break down the prisoners' healthy tissues nor cause them to become undernourished that illness would result."

"I make this suggestion out of a long experience in meeting the diet problems of hundreds of men and women."

Judge Bryant did not indicate whether or not he would accept Mrs. Ross' suggestion.

DENNY THOUGHTS

Is Humankind progressing? Continued wars, a deluge of foolish and futile laws, the bawling of Professional Reformers, make it appear to be dormant or retrogressing.

Yet all classes of persons are enjoying longer life. Women have an equal freedom with men.

Babies have a better chance than ever before. Universities are finding it hard to expand with the increased numbers of students who wish to enroll.

The sale of books was never greater. The world is going to continue to be burdened with troubles, but there probably will be fewer of them.

LOS ANGELES, HARBOUR, Nov. 6.—As a result of the recent successful catapulting of a Loening amphibian biplane from the gun turret of a battleship by a powder explosion, the Navy Department will order every battleship in the fleet equipped with the catapults, it was learned today.

The experiment, made aboard the U. S. S. West Virginia marked the first time that a 5100 pound "amphibian" plane has been launched by means of a powder catapult. A charge of powder, equivalent to that used in an eight-inch shell, shot the ship into space and, without a falter the plane soared over Los Angeles harbor.

Navy officers declared that the success of the experiment will more closely link together the battleship and the airplane.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 6.—The Wall City News, a "newspaper and nothing else but," believed to be the only daily paper ever published anywhere behind prison walls, has just made its bow in San Quentin penitentiary, across the bay from San Francisco. It is a sporting sheet, letter size, four pages, neatly printed, and Vol. 1, No. 1, announces it has the sanction of Warden Frank J. Smith. Frank E. Fenton is editor.

TEXAS CRUDE OIL MAKES 1926 GAIN

AUSTIN, Texas, Nov. 6.—The past year has shown a decidedly marked improvement in the crude oil production of Texas. Great rapidity in growth was shown, according to a statement by Clarence E. Gilmore, chairman of the Railroad Commission.

The prospect of Texas leading the country in production of crude oil by January 1, was the prediction of Gilmore, provided the increase shown in the past few months continues.

Quoting figures of the American Petroleum Institute, for the week ending October 16, Gilmore declared that Texas was but 10,540 barrels behind California, the leading crude oil producer of the United States.

During that period, California produced 608,300 barrels while Texas had 597,600 barrels.

North Texas showed the largest increase in production over a corresponding period of 1925. Production in this section showed 244,950 barrels for the week ending October 16, 1926, compared with 76,650 barrels for the corresponding week in 1925.

Annual expenditure by the U. S. government of $2,000,000 for this purpose will be asked in a bill which Congressman Henry T. Rainey, of Carrollton, Ill., will present to congress at the next session, he has informed the Association of Levee and Drainage Districts of Illinois.

The federal government now spends $10,000,000 annually for relief work in the Mississippi river valley. Under Rainey's bill this amount would be increased to $12,000,000 and the scope of the relief work be broadened to include that in the Illinois river valley.

The plan for federal aid includes a plan for state relief, which has been laid before Governor Len Small. The main proposals of the project are: appropriation of $1,000,000 for widening the channel of the Illinois river and increasing the height and length of bridge spans; establishment of a $500,000 fund from which those who suffer flood losses may borrow money.

OIL SCANDAL CASES FOUGHT BITTERLY; END STILL REMOTE

Sinclair, Fall And Doheny
Delay Action By
Appeals

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—After a week of skirmishing by lawyers, the end of the famous oil scandal cases appeared today to be far off.

The intention of the principals to fight virtually every move of the government to the last technical refuge in the supreme court was indicated by their legal maneuvers.

Harry F. Sinclair, millionaire oil magnate, who was indicted with former Secretary of the Interior Albert B. Fall on charges of conspiring to defraud the government in the Teapot Dome deal, has taken the second of three cases involving him to the supreme court.

Despite the fact that Fall and Edward L. Doheny, head of the Pan-American Petroleum Company, are scheduled to face trial in the criminal court here on November 22 on another conspiracy charge growing out of the Elk Hills, Calif., naval oil reserve lease, there was also a possibility that this case will be delayed by a new move.

Attorneys for ex-Secretary Fall may seek delay through a challenge to the authority of congress to name special prosecutors.

The supreme court now has before it a civil suit involving the legality of the Doheny lease on the Elk Hills reserve. A similar suit to cancel the lease of Harry F. Sinclair's Mammoth Oil Company on Teapot Dome has just reached the high court on a petition for review.

Sinclair's latest move is to take into the high court an appeal from the District of Columbia circuit court of appeals dismissing his special appeal to that tribunal.

Another case which the oil magnate is fighting is a citation for contempt in refusing to answer questions of a senate committee. This case has been virtually in suspension for many months, awaiting a high court ruling in the Mal S. Daugherty case.

The civil suits have already run the gamut of the federal district courts and circuit courts of appeals.

The government has charged in its suits that the alleged conspiracy to gain huge profits from the oil on naval reserves had its real inception in the passing of the leasing act of 1920. It is possible that years may elapse before the last legal battle based on the controversy has been waged.

FORTY THREE ARE INDICTED BY JURY

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 6.—Forty three indictments involving almost one hundred defendants on charges ranging from liquor and dope to mail fraud were on record here today by the federal grand jury late yesterday after ten days' deliberation.

Featuring the speed of federal court was the case of John F. Brown, Akron, O., who was sentenced to five years in the Atlanta federal prison just five minutes after the indictment for using the mails to defraud was returned against him.

Seven per cent of the indictment returned charged the defendants with violation of the national prohibition law. Noteworthy among these was that of Harry E. Dorsey, former mayor of Lima, O., who is charged with accepting a liquor violation and on a conspiracy count.

WILL OPPOSE PLAN FOR RAIL MERGER

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—The plan of the New York Central railroad to control under lease the Big Four, Michigan Central and Chicago, Kalamazoo and Saginaw railroads will be vigorously protested before the interstate commerce commission, it was indicated today when the commission permitted various organizations to intervene in the case.

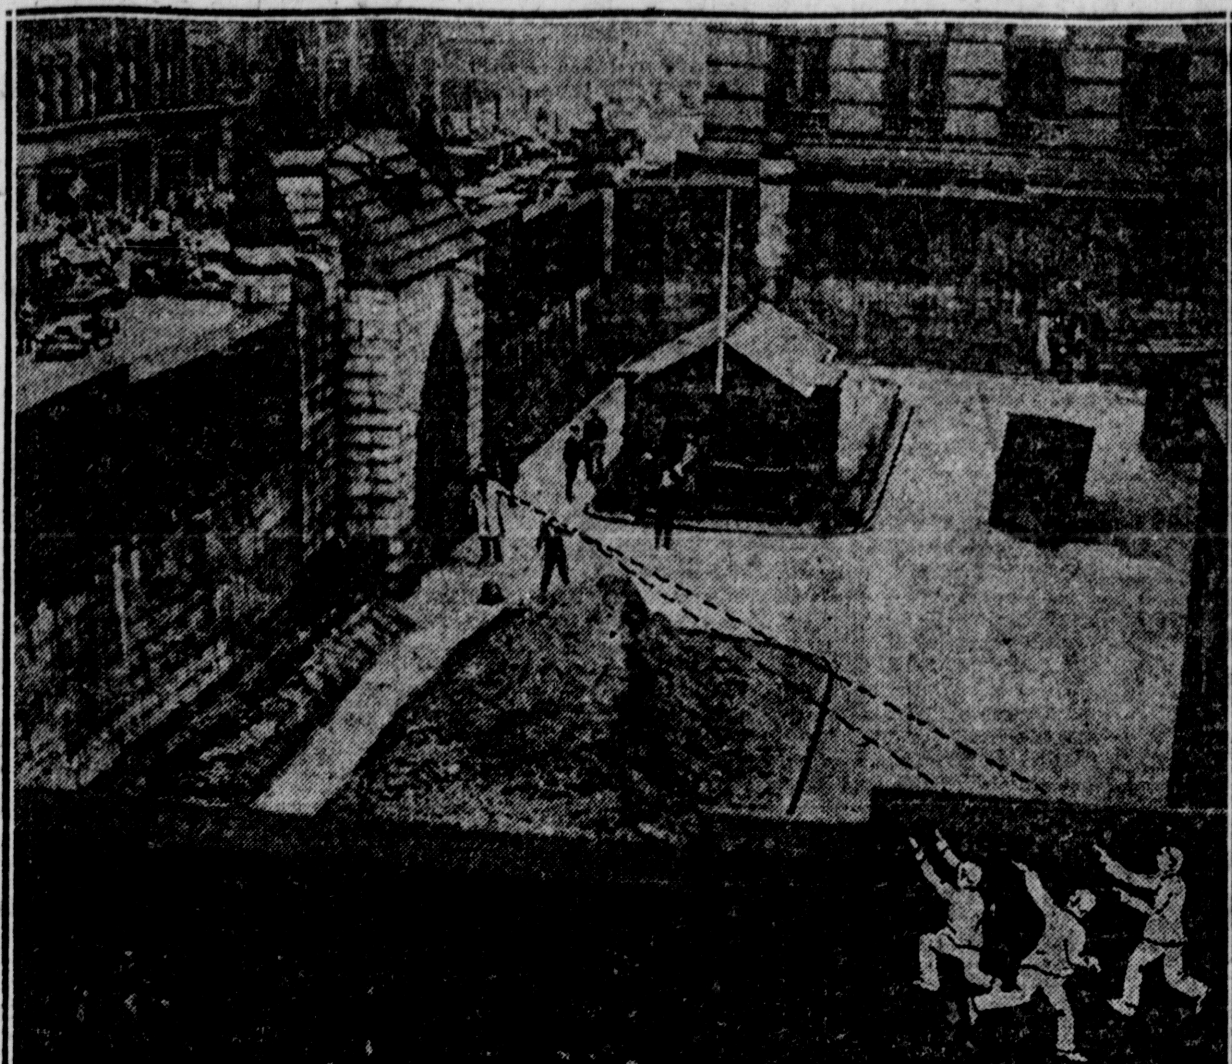

Those authorized to intervene include the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation, Ohio Farm Bureau Service Company, Ohio Public Utilities Commission, the Stockholders' Protective Committee of the Big Four, Athens (Ohio) Chamber of Commerce and District No. 6 of the United Mine Workers.

GOVERNOR LEADING BY SMALL MAJORITY

PHOENIX, Ariz., Nov. 6.—With but four more precincts to be heard from, Governor Hunt today was leading his Republican opponent, E. S. Clark, by 366 votes. Clark refuses to concede the election of Hunt.

Because of the closeness of the race and charges of ballot-box stuffing in two counties, a recount or contest loomed today, according to rumors.

SCHEME TO DEFRAUD CANTON COMPANY OF MONEY IS REVEALED

Pair Indicted For Mis-
using Mails In Stock
Fraud

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 6.—Details of a scheme by which the United Steel Alloy Company, of Canton, was to have been defrauded of huge sums were made known here today following return of indictments by a federal grand jury against William Hodge, an inspector for the steel organization, and Arthur R. Mason, of Cleveland. They are charged with misuse of the mails.

The two men are alleged to have formed a brokerage company here and had solicited customers through the mails, according to D. C. Vanburen, assistant United States district attorney.

The scheme was to ship first-grade steel to the brokerage firm here billed as second-grade material. The product then was to be resold at top prices, the brokers splitting the profits.

The indictment returned against Hodge and Mason charges them with using the mails to defraud and with accepting a bribe of $10,000 for their services.

Seven per cent of the indictment returned charged the defendants with violation of the national prohibition law. Noteworthy among these was that of Harry E. Dorsey, former mayor of Lima, O., who is charged with accepting a liquor violation and on a conspiracy count.

PHYSICIAN, POET AND INVENTOR DIES

CINCINNATI, Nov. 6.—Funeral services for Dr. John Robertson, 72, widely-known poet, physician, inventor, politician and "dry" worker, will be held here next Monday.

As well as being a highly-rated physician, the dead man was also a strong advocate of prohibition and several times was a candidate for governor of Ohio and congressman.

MAN DEAD AND WIFE HURT AFTER REVEL

TOLEDO, O., Nov. 6.—Howard A. Ewald, 24, is dead and his wife, Betty, seriously injured as the result of bullet wounds received during a fight which climaxed an all-night revel here early this morning.

The altercation took place in the home of Edward Langley, where it is alleged that Ewald became enraged at a remark made concerning his wife, George Reuther, another visitor at the house, became involved in the affair and is alleged by police to have fired several shots.

Langley and Reuther are being held for investigation.

HALL-MILLS PROSECUTOR IN QUANDARY; STAR WITNESS ILL

Testimony Of "Pig Woman" May Be Delayed Several Weeks—Simpson Fears Case May Be Damaged.

SOMERVILLE, N. J., Nov. 6.—Prosecutor Alexander Simpson, dominant figure in the Hall-Mills murder trial, today faced a dilemma—the fact that the state's star witness, Mrs. Jane Gibson, the "pig woman," is so seriously ill that she may not be able to testify in court for weeks.

Whether this tough "break" against the spunky little prosecutor or will jeopardize his chances of convicting the wealthy Mrs. Frances Stevens Hall and her two brothers, Willie and Henry Stevens, of the murder of the Rev. Edward Wheeler Hall and his choir singer, Mrs. Eleanor Mills, was the uppermost topic for debate in Somerville today.

Simpson's friends were willing to gamble that the harassed but indomitable prosecutor will find a way out of the situation.

He wanted to get the "pig woman's" testimony into the record ever so badly, "before the hand of death might aid in the miscarriage of justice." Her story is vital in his case. But the two presiding judges wouldn't sign a warrant forcing the doctors at Somerset hospital to bring the woman to the court room; neither would they transfer the trial from the court house to the hospital in order that her testimony could be obtained.

Today Simpson had before him the official statement of Dr. A. A. Lawton, of the Somerset hospital, and Dr. Edward L. Keyes, of New York, a specialist in kidney diseases, that it may be several weeks before Mrs. Gibson is able to testify.

"Mrs. Gibson is suffering from an acute infection of the left kidney and the kidney pelvis," said an official statement issued by the doctors. "She is in no immediate danger of death, however."

GOVERNMENT LOSES SUIT AND APPEALS

CINCINNATI, O., Nov. 6.—The United States circuit court of appeals today had under consideration the appeal of the government from the decree of the federal district court here in the government's attempt to regain $5,000, 000 alleged overpayments from A. Bentley and Sons Company, Toledo.

The overpayments, the government contended, were made during its contract with the Toledo concern for the construction of Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, O., in 1917.

The appeal was taken by the government after the suit had been ordered dismissed in federal district court here.

Arguments were heard late yesterday in the case.

ISABELLE POPE TO ASK RE-HEARING

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Nov. 6.—Attorneys representing Isabelle Pope, fiancée of Billy McClintock, today filed notice with the clerk of the supreme court that they will file a petition for rehearing of the court's decision at the October term admitting McClintock's will to probate.

The will of McClintock, for whose death William Shepherd stood trial for murder, left a $1,000,000 estate to Shepherd, who was acquitted.

SHOCK KILLS WOMAN FOLLOWING RAID BY STATE DRY RAIDERS

Husband Will Sue; May
Ask Change In State
Law

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 6.—A change in the state law which permits state dry raiders to work without restriction as to territory was urged here today by Safety Director Edward D. Barry as an investigation of the death of Mrs. John Pongracz, 42, got under way.

The woman died, presumably of fright and shock, a few minutes after dry agents, working under a suburban justice of the peace, raided her home in Cleveland late yesterday. Barry questioned the raiders for an hour after Cleveland police had picked them up. They declared they found half a pint of whiskey and 100 gallons of wine in the cellar and that they had a search warrant. Police today were checking reports that the woman had been roughly treated by the raiders. The woman's husband announced he would bring a damage suit against the raiders on behalf of himself and his five children. An autopsy was to be performed today to check reports by an undertaker that he found marks upon the woman's abdomen indicating she had been roughly handled.

MYSTERY CONTINUES TO CURTAIN IDENTITY OF SKELETON FOUND

Circumstances surrounding the death of an aged man, apparently between sixty and seventy-five years of age, whose completely decomposed body was found in tall weeds on the farm of J. W. Dlee, Fairground Road, Thursday, will probably always remain a mystery.

The body is believed by Coroner R. L. Haines, Jamestown, to have been that of Washington Battistoni, 75, colored, who escaped from the County Infirmary three months ago. The skeleton bore no marks of violence and it is supposed the man died a natural death while hunting black berries.

Identification has not been definitely made and Coroner Haines is believed to consider the investigation a closed incident. Remains were buried in Woodland cemetery Friday by R. M. Neeld, undertaker.

QUEEN MARIE BRINGS PEACE TO ENTOURAGE

ABOARD QUEEN MARIE'S SPECIAL TRAIN, (IN WASHINGTON), Nov. 6.—The magnetic queen of Roumania smiled today upon the turbulent forces seeking to serve her and peace dawned over her kingdom on wheels.

Her majesty took hold of a delicate situation with the diplomacy for which she is famed. The beautiful Balkan queen let it be known that she considered recent untoward incidents aboard her transcontinental train as merely the outgrowth of a too-ardent desire on the part of the combatants to represent her interests. While taking no direct side in the controversy between Sam Hill, whose guest she was at the dedicatory exercises at Maryhill museum, and Major Stanley Washburn, her aide and adviser, Queen Marie called both her friends and bid the hatchet be buried. It is felt in royal circles that "the white lion," as the queen sometimes calls Sam Hill, has "had his big moment" in the matter of the queenly blessing bestowed upon his museum and will beg to be excused when the royal train reaches Seattle this afternoon.

However, the Quixotic millionaire is known to have expressed a wish that he could alter his personal plans so as to accompany the party to Chicago.

Above the cooing of the dove of peace, echoes of the Washburn-Hill feud could still be heard. Since Hill

REPUBLICANS FACE DEMOCRAT CONTROL IF FRAZIER REBELS

North Dakota Senator
Read Out Of Party
May Get Revenge

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—After suffering a series of defeats in Tuesday's elections, the Republican party faced a new peril today in the possibility that the Democrats may assume actual control of the senate in the new congress.

While the Republicans boasted of holding forty-eight seats in the new senate—just enough to organize that body after next March 4—their calculations included Senator Lynn J. Frazier, of North Dakota, insurgent, who was openly and eagerly thrown out of the party just twenty months ago. Now, like a "chicken come home to roost," Frazier hasn't made up his mind whether he'll be a party Republican when it comes time to organize the senate.

Without Frazier's vote the senate would divide forty-seven Republicans, forty-seven Democrats, one Farmer-Laborite and one "Independent"—as the Republicans themselves have classified the North Dakotan since March, 1925. This Republican strength includes Senator-elect Smith, of Illinois, and Vane of Pennsylvania, and, if their certificates are refused at the initial session of the new senate, all hope of Republican control will be destroyed.

If Frazier votes with the Democrats to organize—regardless of the Smith and Vane contests—that

Failure Of Three Mill Levy Tuesday Leaves City
"Broke"—City Hall Closed—Legion Volunteers Assistance

WASHINGTON, C. H., Nov. 6.—This little town may be patronized by American Legion men and its fire department may be manned by veterans of the World War after Sunday because the citizens failed to vote favorably on a three-mill bond issue last Tuesday.

Mayor George Allen has notified the water and electric companies that the city was "broke" and would not be responsible for any more bills contracted. His next move was to cut the fire and police departments to one man each. Then he moved his offices to his own private law office, closing the city hall.

The American Legion volunteered for duty until the crisis can be met.

WIFE-SLAYER GOES ON TRIAL; CROWDS JAM BATAVIA COURT

Extra Guards Placed
Around Accused Man
—Pick Jury

BATAVIA, O., Nov. 6.—The largest crowd that ever jammed the little Clermont County Court House milled into the court room today, where the trial of Nicholas Workman, alleged wife-slayer, was expected to get under way.

Extra guards were ordered placed around the accused man both in the court room and during the time he spends in his cell.

His wife, mother of eleven children, none of which are now living, was found dead in their country home last August. When officers attempted to take Workman into custody, he seized two of his babies, holding them in front of him to prevent the officers from firing, the state alleges.

A venire of more than 200 prospective jurors was exhausted before a jury was secured yesterday. No women were chosen to act on the jury.

EUROPE COMBINING AGAINST AMERICA SAYS PARIS SCRIBE

Common Enmity Is Bringing Old Enemies
Together

By BASIL WOON
Staff Correspondent of EFS and
The Daily Gazette
Copyright, 1926 (EFS)

PARIS, Nov. 6.—Common enmity of America has brought war-torn Europe together in a one-sided but mutual distrust and antagonism of the United States. Nations which were implacable foes but a few years ago are toasting each other in secret conferences which have but one aim: The humbling of the United States.

Until recently the subject of uncomplimentary cartoons in the Paris press was the Hooche. They drew him fat and grotesque with a large round head and a little feathered hat. Now these same cartoonists concentrate their venom on the American. No longer is Uncle Sam the cheerful, bountiful, gallant gentleman with chin-whiskers and striped trousers. Now they picture him as a swollen, repulsive individual with a hook nose, gold pouring from his money bags and a bill in his hand. In their prints he is a Shylock. In their pictures he is a bailiff, a merciless creditor.

Aux Ecoutes, famous political weekly owned by an influential man named Levy urges: (a) That Americans be forbidden to land in France without payment of a heavy tax in dollars; (b) That all American cafes and restaurants in Paris be abolished by law; (c) That any American caught buying French land or real estate property should be given the alternative of becoming a French citizen (involving military service) and having his purchase confiscated; (d) That Americans be obliged to change all their dollars at the Bank of France.

INCOME TAX PAYER MAY GET 25 CENTS

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—The average small taxpayer in America will get a refund of twenty-five cents if congress approves President Coolidge's plan for a ten to twelve per cent rebate on 1926 incomes, it was revealed today by treasury figures.

Income tax officials regard the "average small taxpayer" as a married man with two dependents, who earns $5,000 or less a year. For extremely wealthy taxpayers the refunds will amount to $200,000 in some cases.

ALLEGED LIQUOR DEALER IS KILLED

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 6.—Detectives here today advance two theories for the death of Angelo Bottaro—a love triangle or warfare between bootleggers. He had been convicted three times for liquor charges. Bottaro was killed by a fusillade of shots as he sat in an automobile. He had been invited to "take a ride" by another man believed also to have been an illicit rum dealer.

Police are questioning Bottaro's sweetheart.

KING WILL OPPOSE DISMISSAL POWER

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 6.—Asserting that the recent supreme court decision giving the president power to dismiss unfit federal office-holders was not in harmony with the principles of constitutional government, Senator Wm. H. King, of Utah, declared here today that a constitutional amendment nullifying this decision will be submitted at the next session of congress.

TESTIMONY IN HALL- MILLS CASE DENIES STORY OF DEFENDANT

Mrs. Marie Demarest
Cross-Examined at
Murder Trial

COURT HOUSE, Somerville, N. J., Nov. 6.—Mrs. Marie Demarest, witness for the state in the Hall-Mills murder trial, was recalled to the stand for cross-examination when court opened at 10:15 a. m. today.

She has attacked the alibi of Henry Stevens, who, with his brother, Willie, and his sister Mrs. Frances Stevens Hall, is charged with the murder of the Rev. Edward W. Hall and his attractive young choir singer, Mrs. Eleanor Mills.

Mrs. Demarest, who was a member of Dr. Hall's church, had testified that Henry Stevens was the man she saw in New Brunswick the day before the bodies were found in De Russy's lane. Stevens had claimed he was not in New Brunswick until his sister sent for him after the bodies were found.

Mrs. Demarest replied spiritedly to Defense Attorney Clarence E. Case's questions.

"You saw Henry Stevens in an automobile?"

"Yes."

"As you were getting off a car?"

"Yes."

"Was it a closed or an open car?"

"I don't remember."

"You remember you saw Henry Stevens?"

"I certainly do."

"Anybody with you that morning on the trolley car?"

"No!" thundered Mrs. Demarest. "Why do you shout your answer like that?" asked Case.

Prosecutor Alexander Simpson bounced to his feet, asserting Case had no business to ask the witness "why she was elevating her eyebrows, changing her tone or any other such trivial matter."

Case said he wanted to show the witness' attitude.

The question went unanswered.

MARINES LAND AID NOW CONTROL CITY

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 6.—The marines landed today and have been well taken in hand. Active and former leathernecks from all parts of the country, numbering several hundred, were in attendance at the national convention of their organization, under the direction of Major General John A. LeJume, commander.

A colorful parade, which will be climaxed by a banquet tonight, was the outstanding feature of the program, although chief interest centered on the football game between the corps team from Quantico, Va., and John Carroll University.

FORD MERGER PLAN WILL BE ARGUED

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—Henry Ford's plan to merge his railroad properties will be argued orally before the interstate commerce commission on November 27, it was announced today. The Ford plan involves the acquisition of control of the Detroit, Toledo and Ironton and the Toledo-Detroit by the Detroit and Ironton. Majority stockholders, who hold about two per cent of the stock of the Detroit Toledo and Ironton, are fighting the proposed merger on the grounds that Ford has not allowed them sufficient amount per share for their stock.

BURY ANNIE OAKLEY IN CINCINNATI

CINCINNATI, O., Nov. 6.—Annie Oakley, known in private life as Mrs. Frank Butler but once heralded throughout the world and under the "big tops" as the "greatest rifle-woman of the universe," was to come back to Cincinnati today.

And here, where many times she drew awed respect from young and old with dazzling feats of marksmanship, her body was to be cremated in accordance with her last wish before she died, earlier this week, in Greenville, Ohio.

HEAR ADDRESSES

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 6.—Addresses and reports of committees feature today's sessions here of the Central Ohio Teachers' Association. The program called for addresses by Dr. Ernest Horn, Iowa University, on "Modern Tendencies in Moral Education," and by Miss Emily Griffith, director of Denver Opportunity School.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE

Still another example of the complete self-suppression of one's own feeling in the interest of her husband is that of the wife of Disraeli, one time prime minister of England. He was scheduled to make an important address before the House of Lords at the time of a crisis in the government. The welfare of all the British Empire seemed to be wrapped up in the outcome of the action which might be taken following his speech. It was Mrs. Disraeli's custom to ride with him to the house of parliament, but not to enter. Upon this occasion as she entered the brougham, the footman, in closing the door, caught her finger in it and pinched off its end. Concealing her pain from her husband, she rode with him to the journey's end, said goodbye to him, then ordered the coachman to drive her to a doctor, where the injured member was dressed. It was not until after the speech had been delivered and he had returned to his home that the great Disraeli knew of the accident. To have known of it before would have disconcerted him and have weakened the force of his address.

These women, and women of their kind, are not of the "clinging vine" variety. On the other hand they did not aim to attain to the same kind of greatness that characterized their husbands, however, they did attain to an equal degree although in another sphere. It has been said that a woman's best qualities do not reside in her intellect but in her affections. Oliver Wendell Holmes observed that the "brain-women" never interest us like the "heart women." And another has said: "If I were suddenly asked to give a proof of the goodness of God to us, I think I should say that it is most manifest in the exquisite difference He has made between the souls of men and women, so as to create the possibility of the most comforting and charming companionship that the mind of man can imagine."

The army announces that it has saved $10,000 by chopping the tails off 6,000 white butchers' coats left over from the war and using the tails thus cut off for patch pockets and caps for army chefs, while the tailless coats have been turned over to the army cooks and bakers. That is a pretty piece of economy and suggests others that might be effected. For instance, they might have made rolling pins out of the wooden slips, or converted the extra horse shoes into armor plate for new cruisers. There were enough left-overs from the war, in almost every department, to last the government comparatively as long as the Thanksgiving turkey remnants usually last the average family, if properly taken care of, and converted into useful articles.

THE PROMENADE

A contemporary writer bewails the passing of the old custom of "promenading" on pleasant evenings, and wishes that it might be restored. There is a reason in his plea.

Not so long ago, twilight in almost every community found groups of people—nice people—strolling quietly along the streets, stopping to chat with the groups and combining social intercourse, mild after-dinner exercise and enjoyment of the best part of the day in a fashion as inexpensive as it was charming and conducive to health and neighborliness. As the champion of the promenade points out, it is pity that the fashion of tearing about in motor cars with little result but the exhaustion of purse and nervous energy has so completely superseded this calmer method of enjoyment. "Use your legs," he urges. "It is cheaper than riding and more restful of mind and body."

Those who have the courage to adopt his suggestion and leave the car standing in the garage for a few nights while they promenade, unhooked and unhooking, in the peaceful twilight, we find that life is right.

LIVING OFF THE SOIL

Up in Sacramento, lives Ned Williams who has offered to make his entire living off the soil 50x150 if anyone will furnish the lot. He is an advocate of the "back to the soil" idea and declares a lot of the size specified is sufficiently large to afford a living for one person. He proposes to grow enough from the soil of the lot to give him a comfortable living, but to the ordinary person it would appear he will be more likely to go hungry a good part of the time. Unless he goes in for chickens and reserves the right to buy food for them on the outside, he will have to do a whole lot of digging in order to grow his living.

The motor car driver who hesitates may not get lost, but he'll get bawled out by traffic cops.

OLD SCHOOL HOUSE

During the initial steps toward educational advancement in this county, the facilities for literary attainments were not so varied as are thrown about the youth of today.

Following our cicero along a fixed path through the woods to be old log school house; rapping, voice from the far interior says, "Come in." We pull the latch ring, enter, and, at the request of the "master," settle down upon a puncheon bench, the cynosure of the eyes.

The first thing we observe is that nearly the whole end of the house is occupied by a fireplace.

within the spacious depths of which the crackling blaze sends forth heat, light and cheerfulness.

Our gaze being attracted to the outside, we look, not through French plate, but a hole made by sawing out a log and replacing it with paper greased with lard.

Our attention is recalled by a shrill voice, "Master, mayn't I get a drink?" The urchin goes to the bucket sitting on a bench near the door, takes the tin from the accustomed peg dips it full; drinks a few sips, holding it over the bucket meanwhile, pours the balance back, looks around a while, goes back to his seat and, with his dog's eared book close to his face, is soon lost in study.

We observe the benches are made out of flat rails and puncheons, with wooden pins in them for legs; backs, they have none. The "master" has a table, made by driving pins in the wall and placing hewed puncheons on top of them. Under each window a similar contrivance accommodates the scholars.

MORNING FRIENDS

On people I know slightly
I make my calls at night.
A formal conversation's helped
By much electric light!

In my best bib and tucker,
(Afraid I've come too soon!)
I go to my rare parties
In the middle-afternoon.

But on Em or Sally, goodness!
I drop in any time!
I'm welcome after breakfast,
Or in housecleaning's grime.

To make up one's small social world
It takes all kinds, all blends.
But the nearest and the dearest
Are the early-morning friends!

Every housewife probably has some pet activity she would like to see glorified. Drop a line to Mrs. Rawlings, care of this paper, and tell her about it.

BELONGINGS

Epictetus gives us the thought that "true education lies in learning to distinguish what is ours from what does not belong to us." But this world is too full of people who think that anything belongs to them that they can lay their hands upon and get away with. As a matter of fact, nothing belongs to anyone that one doesn't earn or deserve. Or I might add—appreciate. All other possessions are just plain or polite thievery! He who thinks that the money he has will buy him anything, is already a bandit in his heart. Rich people are those who own cities, rivers, entire mountain ranges, winding roads, forests filled with singing birds and roaming herds of the wild, sunsets, and nights made full of the gold of heaven and the diamonds of the moon.

In a novel by Robert Nathan, called "Autumn," there are many beautiful thoughts. Here is one: "Let the young be free to build a new world. It will be happier than ours. It will be a world of love and candor. Perhaps it will be also a world of poverty. That would not do any harm." Poverty doesn't do anywhere near as much harm as the thought of it. I am speaking of intelligent poverty. Not of the poverty of the slums or of the turn of fortune or fate that leaves a human being at the mercy of injustice. The only wealth that you may keep is that which you lay aside in your heart. And that which you store in other hearts that are worthy of your gifts.

It is a good thing to take an appraisal of your heart every day. What have you put into it that will give you nourishment when you need it most?

OF

New York

By Jack O'Donnell

The happiest kid on Broadway is Marty Ritter.

A few weeks ago Marty, of Red, as he is known to his pals along Tenth Avenue, was doing his stuff—trick dancing—on street corners for pennies. One night Julius Tannen, of the Earl Carroll Vanities, joined the crowd that was watching Marty just off Broadway. Tannen immediately saw possibilities in the ragged urchin, took him to his office and made arrangements to guide Red to stardom.

Now Red is the hardest working member of the Vanities, and the envy of Tenth Avenue.

Charles Bochert, one of the smartest press agents along the Gay White Way, vouches for the truth of the following incident:

Wallace McCutcheon, the actor, bumped into a plain-clothes man who happened in the theatre where McCutcheon is playing, and in the collision McCutcheon felt a suspicious bulge in the cop's hip pocket. The next instant he recognized the policeman as an old acquaintance.

"What do you say we have a little shot?" he said insignificantly.

"Sure!" said the cop.

"Follow me!" said Wallace. The actor guided the cop to a dressing room, pulled out two paper cups and a bottle of ginger ale and said: "Produce."

"Produce what?" asked the cop.

"That from the hip," said McCutcheon.

"What? This?" asked the cop, pulling an automatic pistol from the hip pocket.

"Oh!" said McCutcheon. "Bag pardon. I thought it was something else."

P. S. The cop also was disappointed.

Police Commissioner William McLaughlin has the city slickers on the run. He's making a determined drive against organized gambling, and knowing Bill McLaughlin as well as I do, I'm (st. reputation) betting that he drives the card sharks and sure thing boys off this speculative joint. And more power to him! These grafters are the most merciless creatures that ever robbed a poor box. They fatten on the gullible, never work at or on anything except a sucker, and make things tough for the real hustlers along Broadway.

The lobby of the Ritz. Lunch time. A score of women, ranging in age from sixteen to sixty-six. All with dresses just to the knees. Tresses just to the ears. Legs crossed. Burslesque house stuff. All waiting for the men who are going to buy their lunches. New York's real "bread line."

M'CLELLAND W. C. T. U.

ENTERTAINED THURSDAY
About forty members and friends of the W. C. T. U. met at the home of Mrs. Ory Coblenz, Upper Bellbrook Pike, Thursday afternoon. After devotions, a business session was held in which plans for a Christmas treat for the soldiers in Dayton Military Hospital were discussed and left in the hands of the superintendents of the Soldier and Sailor Department, Mrs. Esther McClain and Mrs. Emma Ketter.

A report from the county convention was given by Miss Zetta McClelland and items from the executive meeting by Miss Myrtle Barnett.

A most excellent report of the state convention in Steubenville was given by Mrs. Carrie McCall, delegate from McClelland Union in which the trend was for the exercise of women's franchise.

Decorations during Halloween were used about the home. Hacks were used pumpkin pie with whipped cream and coffee were served.

FORTIETH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATED

A very interesting event occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Peterson, two miles south of New Burlington, Sunday, in honor of their fortieth wedding anniversary, when their daughter, Aurora, planned a surprise for about twenty guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Peterson found the guests awaiting their arrival from church, the group including guests from Xenia, Wilmington, Springfield and Dayton.

The dining room was the feature of attraction, the south window filled with palms, fuchsias, and begonias, while cut flowers of dahlias, roses and chrysanthemums were in profusion. The long table was laden with choice viands, including twelve large cakes, one bearing forty candles.

Ten guests were present and only ten more were living, out of the seventy-five that attended the wedding forty years ago.

ENTERTAINS WEDNESDAY
The McClelland L. T. L., with mothers of the members entertained the families of the W. C. T. U. very pleasantly at the Glad Community House, Wednesday evening. A bountiful cafeteria dinner was served, after which Mrs. Mary Covey gave an interesting talk of her visit to the resting place of American soldiers in Flanders F. Ids.

The evening was interspersed with music by the McClelland Y. P. B. Orchestra. The program closed with the Lord's Prayer.

MORE THAN $100,000 TO BE DISTRIBUTED IN XMAS SAVINGS

Early next month the annual Christmas buying season will be in full swing and during the forepart of December, Christmas Savings Club checks totalling more than $100,000 will be distributed by the Commercial and Savings Bank and Home Building and Savings Co., the only two local institutions having these departments.

Preparations are being completed by these institutions to mail out checks early next month, it was announced Saturday.

Both in number and size the accounts of the bank and the loan company are much larger than in 1925. There are a total of 2,500 accounts representing an investment of about $115,000.

A. E. Faulker, cashier of the Commercial and Savings Bank, reports that the bank's accounts total 1,200 an investment of $55,000, showing an increase of about $5,000 over last year.

The Home Building and Savings Co. also recorded a substantial increase both in number and size of accounts. The accounts number 1,314 and total approximately $60,000. This is an increase of $7,000 over the 1925 record.

Distribution of the accounts will be made between December 1 and 10 to allow investors time in which to do their "Christmas shopping early" and avoid the annual rush of buyers.

The Christmas Savings Club plan will be continued again next year by both financial houses.

FIRE LOSS HEAVY

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 6.—Fire of the plant of the Teachout Sash, Door and Glass Company here today caused a loss in excess of $300,000. Fireman Fred Walter felt eight feet, breaking a leg, while aiding in fighting the flames. Origin of the fire has not been determined.

Mr. and Mrs. O. W. Everhart, Chestnut St., will have at their guests over Sunday, Mrs. Everhart's mother and sisters, Mrs. Savia Pfaffenberger and daughter, Miss Ruth, of Seymour, Ind., and Mrs. John Bender, Dayton, O., and Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Everhart of Springfield.

RICH BELLE WORKS TO PAY FINE

VIRGINIA CRUMBLISS

Exclusive Dispatch, Copyright, 1926
KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 5.—"I'm glad I did it, because I'm learning something." So says Virginia Crumbliss, aristocratic Tennesseean, who went to work in a candy store at a small wage.

She is earning money to pay the $10 fine which Judge R. P. Williams in city court ordered she must pay for speeding in her sport roadster. Miss Crumbliss had been before the judge previously, charged with speeding. And her father, James G. Crumbliss, former United States marshal for East Tennessee, former city commissioner, former postmaster of Kingston, well known business man and owner of extensive farm lands, had admonished his daughter that if he again had to pay her fine for speeding that he would take the automobile away from her. So Miss Crumbliss, arrested and fined, went to work to save her car.

The roadster takes her to the store every morning. A friend is her employer, Nathan Kuhlman, Jr., who is also popular with the young society set, is manager of the store; and Miss Crumbliss have appeared together in local amateur plays.

BUDGETS FOR CHEST CAMPAIGN OFFERED AT COMMITTEE MEET

Detailed budgets of the Red Cross and Social Service League for the coming fiscal year upon which will be based the goal of the Community Chest campaign to be conducted this month, were submitted at the first organizational meeting of the chest auxiliary committee at the city hall commission chamber Thursday night.

It was decided at the session to divide the city into five sections for canvassing purposes.

The budgets of the two agencies that will participate in the drive this year, must meet with the approval of the chest executive committee. Chairman C. S. Frazer expects to call a meeting of the committee early next week for the purpose of discussing the budgets recommending any changes that are thought necessary.

The budgets will then be submitted to the chest's auxiliary committee composed of thirty-four members, who will also pass upon figures. This committee will have actual charge of naming sub-committees and making all the necessary arrangements to begin the campaign of solicitation.

No definite date for the drive has been fixed.

WILFUL ABSENCE ALLEGED IN SUIT

Charging wilful absence from home for more than three years, Augusta L. Turner has brought suit for divorce from John H. Turner in Common Pleas Court. They were married at Mayville, Ky., January 2, 1912. No children were born of the marriage.

SUES ON NOTE
Alleging there is due from the defendants $150.20 on a promissory note, Mary Tate has filed suit in Common Pleas Court against W. S. Chalmers, N. J. Chalmers and M. E. Chalmers for recovery of that amount. Miller and Pinney are attorneys for the plaintiff.

Domino Craze Takes Paris.
Paris is a lazy town. The latest craze here is dominoes. Old-fashioned dominoes—you know, the double-six and three make fifteen, and so on.

You wouldn't believe it, but the game has completely captured the sporting set of the city and is the center of passionate interest in several of the leading restaurants and establishments. Henry's hotel, to which the game was until now confined, is having its championship just now, the contestants being Bob Lloyd, the Methuselah of the Atlantic lanes, Norman Coster, formerly European manager for the U. S. Steel corporation and U. S. Rubber, "Book" Barretto, who now has the latter position; Ferdinand Lambricht, head of Meyrowitz; Colonel Brackett and Colonel Bond, retired; Jack Stone, sportsman and pig raiser, the only man in the world with the nerve to raise dogs and pigs on the same farm and sell sausages; Charles Lander Brazelle, of the Pullman family and Biarritz.

Over at the New York, where the click of dominoes has all but replaced the tinkle of dice, the enthusiasts include William Henly, whose orchestra played the first jazz music heard in France—that was in '17; Harry McElhone, recording secretary of the International Association of Bar-Flies; G. Wynn, celebrated artist; Gerald "Jed" Kiley, a Cane capitalist, and Arthur Moss, once a New York editor and the most erudite among the nice people as distinguished from the charming.

At Bushby's the champions are Allingham, an English gentleman who is my private bet for the championship, and William Doyle, a sportsman whose rendezvous for the elite of the green table was once a very famous establishment in London. William is an American.

The battle waxes ardent and passions are high. If you hear of other French revolution you will know the cause.

A Bit of Gossip.
I mentioned Charles Lander Brazelle in the above. Mr. Brazelle is worth mentioning. Not only is he of the San Francisco branch of the Pullman family, as already hinted, but he is the lad who married the lady who was divorced from the brother of the Joyce who divorced Peggy Hopkins. I hope you understand.

The Brazelles live at Biarritz, where they have a large villa, and Charles is in Paris now on an interesting mission. He is selling stock in the company which is to launch the new casino, the Pavillon Royal, at Sacchino, near Biarritz.

As a restaurant and dancing place Pavillon Royal has already been the smartest on the Basque coast, due to the Prince of Wales doing all his entertaining there. They are now increasing capital so as to install thirty haccarat and two boules tables, on the theory that if one is born every minute at least a reasonable percentage may be expected to drift sooner or later to Biarritz.

I'm getting some of that stock. I remember that Monte Carlo casino shares haven't paid less than 46 per cent since the day Camille Blanc, sitting on a rock above the Mediterranean, dreamed Monte. I also remember that the original stockholders in Deauville casino are all millionaires today.

And the men building the Pavillon Royal casino are the same who built Deauville with Henri Letellier the magnificent at their head. But it's no use your writing to me to buy you some shares. They were subscribed fully in exactly 10 minutes—30,000,000 francs worth.

Recipe for Married Harmony.
Captain French strolled into town the other day, his wife the famous and delightful Ida, having gone back to America a few weeks ago with Fanny Ward.

A most charming couple. The captain is a rich tea merchant and Ida—well, you know who Ida is.

They get along together better than any married couple I have ever known. This may, of course, be because the Atlantic ocean seems to be between them.

MIRRORS OF PARIS

Exclusive Dispatch, Copyright, 1926
PARIS, Nov. 6.—The Bal de l'Internat by all accounts must have been what the lads call "rough." The Bal de l'Internat in the annual orgy of the medical students and internes and in respect of daring far exceeds the famous Bal des Quat'Z-Ais given by the artistic fraternities earlier in the year.

This year the Internat was held in Bal Bullier, oldest of the Latin quarter revel centers, which is situated just opposite the Cafe Closerie des Lilas which readers of Trill by will remember as the place Sven-gall used to take Trillby for her evening aperitif.

Costume, or lack of it, was obligatory, and most of the students represented something to do with medicine or surgery. Some went as surgical instruments; others as portions of the anatomy; and these last were not among the least daring.

Each hospital or school had its own booth or "clicin" in the hall and some of these were fixed up as operating rooms. A student of the Ecoles Centrales came, in fact, costumed as an appendicitis operation. There were plenty of humorous references to Dr. Serge Voronoff's celebrated monkey-glands and the Hotel Dieu (which isn't God's hotel at all but the city hospital) came in procession leading a huge baboon on one chain and on another an effigy of the most venerable professor of the faculty apparently in the last stages of senility. Later during the evening he was "rejuvenated" and celebrated the occasion by dancing a Charleston.

While nurses were not permitted to be present there were plenty of ladies, friends of students. In the course of the evening the internes elected their "Queen," who turned out to be the incredibly old and amazingly wrinkled woman who sells flowers on the Cite side of the Pont Neuf bridge.

DODGE POPULARITY REACHES PINNACLE WITH COUPE MODEL

"Every day sees more and more people coming into our showroom to look at the special coupe," said Fred S. Johnston, local Dodge Brothers dealer, commenting on the many improvements which Dodge Brothers have made recently.

"People in all walks of life are driving it," Mr. Johnston continued. "Women, students, and everybody who wants an attractive car with an intimate atmosphere about it—and yet dependable, uninterrupted service."

"Improvements have been made in the motor which give it a new smoothness and snap of performance. The car has a quick get-away in traffic, and is easy to park. That feature has great appeal to women especially. The two-unit starter makes starting easy even in the coldest weather."

"The body has a grace of line accentuated by the dark green lacquer finish. Unobstructed vision is made possible by the one-piece windshield and slender pillars of the improved all steel body. Long underslung springs and large balloon tires give exceptional riding comfort. The entire interior of the car, too, reflects discriminating taste."

"It really is not surprising, when you consider the low price, that these refinements and improvements have made the special coupe so popular."

STUDEBAKER MODEL SCORES SUCCESS AT ENGLISH AUTO SHOW

Another record breaking success was scored by the Erskine Six, Studebaker's new two and one-third litre car, at the Olympia Show in London, according to cables received by A. R. Erskine, president of The Studebaker Corporation of America.

"The showing of the Erskine car created the biggest sensation of any new models at Olympia," cabled L. J. Ollier, managing director of Studebaker of Great Britain, Limited, London. "Our stands are crowded from early morning until close of show. Dealers enthusiastic and I confidently predict that we will sell ten thousand Erskines in 1927. We congratulate you all on the marvelous product."

The success of Studebaker's export car at the Olympia Show follows its triumphant introduction earlier in October at the Paris Salon, where for the first time in the history of this international motor car exposition an American car proved to be the sensation of the Salon.

In London as in Paris the Erskine Six struck the keynote of a new trend in motoring. Exhibits at the big Olympia Show indicated that overseas drivers are demanding the standard of power and comfort afforded by the American car with its superior pick up, pulling power and flexibility. The same swing toward the added power and flexibility of six cylinder cars that was evident at the Paris Salon was noted at the big British show, where the Erskine Six, as the only American car combining these qualities with the compactness and economy required by overseas motorists, condition repeating the success of its first appearance in Paris.

EUROPEAN AND SOUTH AMERICAN GOVERNMENT BONDS STRONGER

Merits Of Foreign Issues Discussed By Financial Expert—Investments Yield Less Than U. S. Offerings

By FRED R. RIPLEY
Special Financial Writer of EFS
and The Daily Gazette
Copyright 1926 (EFS)

One of the questions most often asked by the growing number of laymen investors is, "Are foreign government bonds a good buy?" A reliable answer must be given circumspectly.

There has been marked improvement in the economic conditions of practically all the countries whose government bonds are outstanding in the United States. The progress of the progress of European countries in this respect is a matter of almost daily report. Today the budgets of all the more important Continental countries are actually balanced except those of Belgium and France. The currencies of Great Britain, Switzerland, Sweden, Holland, Norway, Denmark and Germany have been brought back to par.

The currencies of Austria, Hungary, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, and Finland have been definitely stabilized. While some further work in this field has yet to be done, the situation is incomparably better than it was five years ago.

South American republics have been making similar progress, both in the financial conditions of the governments and in the economic positions of the countries. The currencies of Argentina and Uruguay have been on a gold basis for many years, and in the last five years central banks more or less of American model, have been established in Colombia, Brazil, Chile and Peru definitely established on the gold basis.

Upon progress already made, the American market's appraisal of the credit of governments has been raised and the prices of their bonds in our markets have advanced, despite the constant influx of new issues for the same countries. Prior to the war America had few offerings of foreign bonds. These few mostly represented merely participation in a British loan. But the offerings in 1919 and 1920 of foreign bonds originated by American bankers really signalled the introduction of foreign securities to this market.

The purchase of these securities then and since has been, in general, a most satisfactory investment. The current income return has been high compared with that from other classes of bonds and the price appreciation on the whole has been substantial.

Factors That Rule Bonds.
In the mind of an investor, the desirability of any bond is determined, first by the comparative safety or security of the bond, and secondly, by the size of the return it makes over a given period. As to security, the larger proportion of foreign bonds held in this country are the obligations of national or state government, and this class of bond constitutes the safest of all forms of investment.

It is not yet generally realized in this country how well assured is the payment of principal and interest of foreign government bonds. In the thirty years before the war the average total of all government bonds outstanding was $32,500,000,000 of which less than four-tenths of one per cent on the average were in default.

In the same period the bonds of American industrial corporations were in default to the extent of 2.7 per cent and the bonds of American railroads to 1.85 per cent. Even during the difficult years that have passed since the war the percentage of foreign government bonds listed on the London stock exchange which were in default was only 1.6 per cent, not including Russian government bonds.

Even where default occurs on foreign government bonds a loss of principal or any part of it is rare. Almost always within a comparatively short time an adjustment of the debt is made which gives the bondholders their interest and principal in full.

Naturally the obligations of the various governments are not of equal value in the market any more than those of railroads or municipalities. In some cases this is due to the provisions of issue of certain bonds which establish a special value, or restrain an upward movement beyond a certain figure.

The most important factor, however, is the market credit of the issuing government, and this is based largely on the estimate of the degree of security behind the bond, that is, the proportion of resources of all kinds to the amount of the obligation. Fundamentally this is what fixes the yields at which foreign bonds sell. This degree of security is estimated chiefly from a consideration of a number of indices of the financial position of the government and the economic position of its country. As regards the first, the most important index is the statement of revenue and expenditure of the government.

Sound finance requires that the ordinary budget should balance, that is, the normal and regular expenditures in each year should be covered by revenues from regular and permanent sources.

Extraordinary expenditures, if met from the proceeds of loans, should be for productive purposes only, that is, for investment in undertakings which will themselves produce the revenue necessary for the service of the loans made to finance them.

Another point is that charges for interest and sinking fund on the government's debt should not absorb too much, perhaps not more than 25 per cent of the ordinary revenues, unless the debt represents in part investment in self-supporting properties.

How Credit Is Determined.
If the government has borrowed to build and acquire railroads and port works, or to establish monopolies or other revenue-producing enterprises, and if these enterprises earn their quota of the debt charges the proportion of debt charges to revenue may safely run higher than 25 per cent, because the charges made for the services rendered by these enterprises are not in the nature of taxation. In this case the country's industry and commerce would have to pay them in any case, no matter who owned the enterprises.

The credit standing of any government's obligations, however, is influenced as much by the economic position of its country as by the financial condition of the government itself. Provision of the means to pay external debt involves not only a budgetary problem, but the problem of creating balances in foreign currency sufficient to provide the amount required for the discharge of the foreign obligations. This is the so-called "problem of transfer" which has been so prominent in recent years in discussions of reparations payments, interrelated debts and the like.

The economic position of a country, so far as concerns the question of transfer, may be determined readily by analysis of the figures of its balance of trade, the relation between the value of its imports and the value of its exports. It is the value of surplus of exports over imports that is available for the payment of foreign obligations.

Exchange Improving.
The world market is becoming more stabilized and demand for goods in particular lines from various countries is on a smoother basis. These two things are building up export demand for nearly all countries and is bringing the value of exports over imports to a better level.

These conditions are finding a reflection in the prices and valuations of foreign bonds. In this country, but, on a yield basis these foreign bond prices are still far below those of domestic securities.

Progress and Approval

For Dodge Brothers, Inc., 1926 already stands out on the calendar as a year of unprecedented progress and success.

From January to date sales have exceeded any previous year's total by a margin at once impressive and significant.

New engineering records have been established by a succession of major improvements extending back to the first of the year.

Never has Dodge Brothers Motor Car ranked so high in public favor. Never before has it so richly deserved the world's good will.

CHEVROLET TRUCKS HELP MAKE MOVIES FOR ROACH STUDIOS

Sometimes only one car will do! Out in the motion picture sanctuaries of California, where money genius and picturesque country unite to provide romantic and thrilling screen stories, the automobile is handed most strenuous assignments.

The motor car frequently gives its star performance behind the screen—unknown to the millions of movie-goers, who are often unaware of the vital contribution which the automobile has made to the taking of the picture.

When the motion picture director sets out to make a western film, the transportation department is confronted with the gigantic task of getting the entire company with all of their paraphernalia out to the great open spaces.

Use of motor cars and trucks has made possible filming pictures in backgrounds that have the authentic atmosphere of the Old West. Year by year, motion picture men declare, it is becoming necessary to go farther afield to secure new and unspoiled scenic effects.

Hal Roach, of the studios which bear his name, recently established a permanent camp at the Big Horn ranch near Moapa, Nev., as a headquarters for the use of his production companies when engaged in making western pictures.

A marked absence of roads is one of the chief beauties of the surrounding country from the standpoint of the directors but the transportation department found it very difficult to establish communication to many of the localities chosen, where the dry bed of sand was the best possible substitute for a highway to be found.

"After various types of motor vehicles had been tried," says Hal Roach, "a Chevrolet truck was purchased. It proved so completely satisfactory that four more were added and the fleet of five has since, time and again, proved its ability to go anywhere and back again through the roadless desert around the Big Horn ranch."

"For personal transportation I invariably use a Chevrolet. On my first trip to the Big Horn ranch, I set out in a larger car. In the first heavy sand encountered the larger car tore out the rear axle and I finished the trip in a Chevrolet."

"Now many of the other executives of the Roach studios employ Chevrolets for their excursions into the country where men and automobiles must be real cars."

OCTOBER INCREASE IN PAIGE-JEWETT SHIPMENTS IS HIGH

DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 6.—A 60 per cent increase in shipments for October as compared with the same month in 1925, is reported by the Paige-Jewett Motor Car Company. The total shipments last month were 3150 cars, both Paiges and Jewetts. This total is not only in excess of last year's figures but is 9 per cent higher than the company's best previous October in 1922, when 2887 cars were shipped.

October's gain over September was 14 per cent. The Paige factory is now in full production, after delays incidental to the changing of its lines and the procuring of new bodies in quantity. It is now manufacturing three new series of cars, the Jewett 6-45, the Paige 6-65, and the Paige 6-75, with a price range for five different models of five-passenger closed cars from $1195 to $1695.

The company recently discontinued the practice of turning out both "standard" and "de luxe" types of the same model and all its cars are of finish, appointments, and equipment that would have rated them in the de luxe class under the former plan. The change was made because the company's sales records showed that the American buyer now demands, in addition to mechanical excellence the utmost in style and comfort.

Xenia Paige-Jewett Co. sells these cars in Greene County.

BITUMINOUS COAL CONFERENCE WILL STUDY DATA ON FUEL

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 6.—German scientists who lead the world in coal research and the production of fuel oil from soft coal will lay their information before the International Conference on Bituminous Coal, called here for November 15, President Thomas S. Baker, of Carnegie Institute of Technology, sponsor of the conference, said today.

Methods and processes evolved by Dr. Friedrich Bergius and Prof. Franz Fischer, the German delegates, will be carefully considered by the conference in its effort to arrive at an economical solution of soft coal problems, Baker declared.

Even France and England, which also will be represented at the conference, have made far more progress with their coal problems than the United States, it was pointed out, but this is because the foreign countries have not the wealth of petroleum available to this country.

Petroleum Problems
Because of the scarcity of petroleum existing for years in the European countries they attacked the problems of producing fuel oil from coal while the United States was enjoying the benefits of a natural supply of petroleum, but Carnegie Institute officials point out that the knowledge that our oil supply is limited has caused an awakening of American fuel technologists.

With the Bergius method the greater part of a given quantity of coal is converted into liquid fuel. A mixture of pulverized coal and petroleum is heated to a temperature of about 700 degrees Fahrenheit in an atmosphere of hydrogen under pressure. Under these conditions the greater part of the coal is converted into liquid products which may be separated into approximately one-third each of heavy gasoline, Diesel engine oil, and fuel oil.

Fischer, who is director of coal research at Mulheim-Ruhr, has made a liquid fuel oil which he calls "synthol" by heating water gas under similar high pressure in the presence of a catalytic material. "Synthol" is a mixture of alcohol, aldehydes and hydrocarbons. It already has been used successfully in automobile engines as a substitute for gasoline, according to reports.

Make Alcohol From Coal
Scarcely less widely known than Bergius and Fischer is Gen. Georges Patart, of Paris, who has invented a process for making alcohol from coal. He will represent France at the conference.

England's delegation includes Dr. C. H. Lander, director of fuel research of the Department of Scientific and Industrial Research, Dr. R. Lessing, fuel technologist, Geoffrey M. Gill, consulting engineer and gas specialist, and Harold Nielson, inventor of the L. & N. process.

What the United States can offer in helping solve the problem of a waning petroleum supply will be presented by a large number of American engineers and scientists who have made important investigations and invented successful processes.

While the problem of obtaining fuel oil from soft coal probably will receive the most attention the conference will be split up into special sessions at intervals, for the discussion of such problems as the complete gasification of coal, high temperature distillation, coal tar products, power and fertilizers, it was announced. The smokeless fuel problem of big cities also will be given a prominent place on the agenda.

MONTHLY BUDGET OF $23 WILL PROVIDE FOOD FOR COUPLE

BERKELEY, Cal., Nov. 6.—Appetizing wholesome meals, amply sufficient to satisfy the wants of any married couple may be prepared on a budget allowing $23 a month for food, according to Dr. Ruth Okey, professor of household science in the University of California.

This allowance is a proven practicability, Dr. Okey states, and was actually put into effect by a young married woman student. It was necessary that she practice rigid economy in order that she and her husband might finish their studies, and this budget did the work.

The basis of the system lies in a proportionately large allowance for fresh fruits and vegetables, while that for meats is comparatively small. Milk and eggs are allowed in abundance, and although the cheaper cuts of meat must be used, it is easy to cook them attractively, Dr. Okey says.

"What one married couple can do, can be done by others," the household scientist declares, "if those in charge of devising the family budget would watch the expenditures for food, money could be saved and used for other necessities or luxuries."

Pledge to the Public on Used Car Sales

1 All used cars offered to the public shall be honestly represented.

If a car is suitable only for a mechanic who can rebuild it, or for someone who expects only a few months' rough usage on a camping trip, it must be sold on that basis. Each car must be sold for just what it is.

2 All Studebaker automobiles which are sold as CERTIFIED CARS have been properly reconditioned, and carry a 30-day guarantee for replacement of defective parts and free service on adjustments.

This is possible because tremendous reserve mileage has been built into every Studebaker, which it is impossible to exhaust in years.

3 Every used car is conspicuously marked with its price in plain figures, and that price, just as the price of our new cars, is rigidly maintained.

The public can deal in confidence and safety only with the dealer whose policy is "one price only—the same price to all." For, to sell cars on this basis, every one of them must be honestly priced to begin with.

4 Every purchaser of a used car may drive it for five days, and then, if not satisfied for any reason, turn it back and apply the money paid as a credit on the purchase of any other car in stock—new or used.

It is assumed, of course, that the car has not been crashed up by collision or other accident in the meantime.

UNREVEALED WITNESS WILL CLINCH HALL-MILLS MURDER CASE FOR PROSECUTION IS RELIABLE PREDICTION MADE

By MARY BLADE

Exclusive Dispatch, Copyright, 1926 SOMERVILLE, N. J., Nov. 6.—Alexander Simpson, special prosecutor, will introduce a mystery witness and heretofore unsuggested evidence to clinch his case against the defendants in the Hall-Mills case.

The prediction is being made upon confidential information obtained from a reliable and authoritative source. The evidence in question was obtained four years ago, at the time of the first investigation of the crime, and has been a secret since. It is of technical nature, and is calculated to be absolute and conclusive in its implications. At the proper moment it will be injected into the prosecution's case to demolish the elaborate defense of the Hall-Stevens-Carpenter lawyers.

One other witness is going to take the stand in the Hall-Mills trial and introduce a new note of sensation. Which one will it be? Reporters and hangers-on at the trial are endeavoring to guess. Here are the possibilities:

MRS. JANE GIBSON—Owner of small pig farm near murder scene. Known as "The Pig Woman." Claims she was eye-witness to crime and places Mrs. Hall, Willie Stevens and Carpenter at or near the scene of slaying. Says she heard four shots and a woman's scream.

MRS. MINNA CLARK—Former member of choir, accused of spying on Dr. Hall and Mrs. Mills and held as accessory to murder.

RALPH V. M. GORSLINE—Vestryman in Dr. Hall's church. Was in de Russy's lane night of the murder and says he heard four shots and screams, but did not see any of participants in shooting.

MISS CATHERINE RASTALL—Member of church choir, who says she was Gorsline's companion on night of murder. It may be proven, however, that she was not Gorsline's companion that evening.

ROBERT ERLAND—Former farm hand, who says he saw Mrs. Gibson in de Russy's lane on night of murder.

HENRY L. DICKMAN—Former New Jersey state trooper, who disappeared after extensive investigations in murder case. Found this year in Alcatraz military prison, San Francisco, and brought back to New Jersey. Claims he was given a bribe to leave the state.

JAMES MILLS—Husband of slain woman and sexton of Dr. Hall's church. Asked his wife where she was going on night of murder and she replied, "Follow me and find out." Claims he suspected "nothing wrong" between his wife and Dr. Hall.

CHARLOTTE MILLS—Daughter of Mrs. Mills. Tells of mother's friendship for Dr. Hall and quotes mother as expressing fear of Mrs. Hall.

BARBARA TOUGH—Former upstairs maid in Hall home. Tells of Mrs. Hall's activities after murder of rector and quotes gossip concerning Dr. Hall and Mrs. Mills.

MRS. LOUISE GEIST RIEHL—Former maid in Hall home. Supplements Miss Tough's testimony and tells of telephone call Dr. Hall received on night of murder.

RAYMOND SCHNEIDER—Country youth who found bodies while on mushroom picking expedition.

MISS PEARL BAHMER—Schneider's companion at time bodies were found.

FERD A. DAVID—Middlesex County detective active in investigation four years ago. Has been assailed by present authorities for conduct of that investigation.

REV. PAUL F. V. HAMBOREZSKY—Hungarian clergyman who says years before murder Dr. Hall told him Henry Stevens had threatened his life if he did not give up association with Mrs. Mills.

PETER TUMULTY—Former gardener in Hall home. Has been questioned at length about pruning shears used while he was working for Mrs. Hall. State attempted to bring out that Mrs. Mills' throat may have been lacerated with such shears.

MRS. LEO HAKENS—Members of Dr. Hall's congregation, who saw Dr. Hall and Mrs. Mills on way to fatal tryst. Says latter carried package which might have contained love letters found near bodies.

FELIX DI MARTINI—New York private detective engaged by counsel for Mrs. Hall four years ago and now accused of having been an accessory after the fact by intimidating state's witnesses.

NELLIE RUSSELL—Negress, who told grand jury that Mrs. Gibson was at her shack at time latter claimed she was in de Russy's lane.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS—Night watchman formerly employed by New Jersey State College for women, who says he saw a woman entering Hall grounds around 2:30 o'clock on the morning following murder.

CHARLES ALPAUGH—Former bus driver, who saw small sedan with lights out, parked near spot mentioned by Mrs. Gibson. Hall and member of New York Stock Exchange, charged with murder, but to be tried later.

HENRY DE LA BRUYERE—Cousin of Mrs. CARPENDER—Cousin of Mrs.

There are other witnesses, but none of them are calculated to rank with these in importance.

BLICKLE'S TOE HELPS BISHOP

Eddie Bickle, Halfback, Ohio Wesleyan. The other picture shows the all-triple-threat artist, does some sky-high kicking when the occasion calls for it. You would not know that this is a picture of the Bishop star except for the side view, which also shows a preponderance of feet and arms.

BOY PAROLED AFTER PLEADING GUILTY TO TWO INDICTMENTS

Pleading guilty to indictments for burglary and grand larceny, Raymond Chambliss was sentenced to serve terms of one to fifteen years and one to seven years in the Ohio State Reformatory at Mansfield and then paroled in the custody of his father, George Chambliss, Friday in Common Pleas Court.

His parole was granted upon his promise to make restitution to Frank Hughes for $40 in connection with the theft of forty-eight cans of patching rubber, oil and one auto tire from his warehouse on Dayton Ave., August 19; and to Edward Huff for participation with two others in the theft of a $75 tarpaulin August 19.

Prosecutor J. Carl Marshall entered a nolle prosequi on a third indictment against Chambliss for burglary and larceny. He was also suspected of complicity in the theft of forty-five chickens from Alva Riley August 21.

BOWLING

Greene County Lumber Co. bowlers took a decided brace and loom as one of the most dangerous contenders in the Xenia Bowling League by virtue of making a clean sweep of their three match games with the Critterons Friday night. The game was a postponed affair, continued from last Tuesday night. Murphy led both teams with a series of 692. Box score:

MINOR CHANGES CLARIFY RULES FOR BASKETBALL GUIDE SHOWS

Only minor changes have been made in the basketball rules for the 1926-27 season, as adopted by committees representing the National Collegiate Athletic Association, the Young Men's Christian Association and the Amateur Athletic Union.

The rules and sections affected are: Rule 1, Section 3.—A diameter is to be drawn in the center circle parallel to the end lines. The purpose of this is to denote the part of the circle belonging to each jumper.

Rule 4, Section 1.—An air pressure of thirteen pounds is recommended as a satisfactory inflation for the ball. This applies to the valve ball which permits the use of an air gauge.

Rule 6, Section 6.—If an injury takes place while the ball is in play, the officials are to withhold their whistles until a play has been completed. The section explains what is meant by "completed." Of course, the captain of the team in possession of the ball can obtain "time out" immediately under the privilege given him in Rule 11, Section 1. The purpose of this change is to prevent the officials from "killing" a play because of an apparent injury which often has no effect upon the play itself.

Rule 6, Section 7.—The umpire is given authority to disqualify players for flagrant unsportsmanlike conduct.

Rule 8, Section 5.—Each center player shall stand with both feet on or inside his half of the center circle. That is, the center is no longer required to stand with his feet entirely inside the circle, but each foot is "in a legal position if any part of it touches the circle, or if it is entirely inside the circle. Neither foot, however, should touch the diameter.

Rule 11, Section 1.—"Time out" shall not be granted for a substitution or at the request of a captain after the ball is in position for one or more free throws. Such "time out" may be granted between the calling of the foul and taking it to the free throw line, but not thereafter until the throw or throws have been taken, whereupon the foul shall be covered by the free throw awarded to both teams, "time out" may be granted while the ball is being taken from one free throw line to the other.

Rule 13, Section 6.—An attempt is made to word this section more clearly and a new ruling is inserted. If two or more free throws are awarded to the same team, at least one of which is for a personal foul, the ball is in play if the last free throw is missed. For instance, a foul is called upon a player for holding and immediately thereafter a technical foul is called upon the same player for delaying the game. The general rule that the ball goes to center after a free throw following a technical foul does not apply here, but the ball is in play if the last free throw is missed. If free throws are awarded both teams, of course the ball goes to center after the last free throw.

Rule 14, Section 11.—Center ball instead of nearer free throw line.

Rule 15, Section 13, Penalty (a).—If a player is fouled in the act of throwing for goal, the goal counts if made. The clause, "if the ball has left the player's hands when the whistle blows for the foul" is eliminated. Of course, this applies to a continuous play, if a player is fouled while attempting to shoot and the whistles blows causing the defense to stop playing, whereupon the player fouled shoots his goal, the goal does not count. This would constitute two distinct attempts or acts of throwing for goal, the second taking place entirely after the ball is dead.

Numerous changes in wording have been made in other parts of the rules, but the intent of such parts is not altered.

SIX CANDIDATES REPORT EXPENSES

Six successful Republican candidates for county office at the November 2 election, have filed their required campaign expense accounts with Earl Short, clerk of the board of elections.

Expense statements of County Auditor R. O. Wead, County Commissioner Herman W. Eavey and Clerk of Courts Harvey Elam show these candidates contributed $25, $20 and $25 in the order named to the Republican Campaign Committee but no other disbursements or receipts are listed.

Miss Helen I. Dodds, treasurer-elect, Prosecutor J. Carl Marshall and Ohmer Tate, sheriff-elect, filed blank statements showing no receipts, disbursements or subventions.

All candidates for county office at the general election are required to file individual campaign expense statements within ten days after the election.

BOSTON IS SEEKING NATIONAL AIRPORT TITLE IS REPORTED

BOSTON, Nov. 6.—Development of Boston as a port for airplanes, in trips to Europe, has received added impetus with the recent boost given the city by Anthony Fokker, inventor and builder of the Byrd North Pole airplane.

The belief that Boston is the gateway to the air, and is the logical starting point in the East for all trans-Atlantic flights, has long been held by Boston men interested in the future of aviation. Fokker has upheld this belief and steps are under way to make the Hub the chief point of embarkation for Europe via the air.

HONEY LOU

by Beatrice Burton
author of "LOVE BOUND" and "HER MAN" ETC.
© JOHNSON FEATURES INC., 1926

READ THIS FIRST:

HONEY LOU HUNTLEY is private secretary to the "GRUMPY" WALLACK, head of the Wallack Fabric Mills.

"Grumpy" hired Honey Lou not only because she is quick and clever, but because she is good-natured and sweet. He likes having her around at that does everyone else at the mills. From the vice-vamp, ANN LUDLOW, to JOE MEADOWS, the shipping clerk. But Honey Lou is afraid of Joe Meadows, without quite knowing why.

One afternoon Honey Lou meets JACK WALLACK, "Grumpy's" son, and heir. She falls in love with him, secretly and violently, and he with her. But when he drives Honey Lou home and kisses her she slaps his face. Later he comes to her home, and she tells him "Home" to Honey Lou is the little flat where she lives with her old-fashioned mother and her half-sister, MARGRET MOODY.

The next day young Wallack starts work at the mills. Ann Ludlow tells Honey Lou he is there to learn the business, so he can take it over when his father retires. He comes to Honey Lou late in the afternoon, in dirty overalls, and asks her to meet him at the corner, and drive home with him. She refuses to meet on the street corner, and that night when she leaves her office she finds him waiting for her outside. He is talking to a beautiful blond girl who is sitting in a closed automobile that is drawn up to the curb. Honey Lou wonders who the girl is, and what she is doing there at that hour.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER V

HONEY LOU could see that the other girl's eyes never left her as she crossed the muddy sidewalk to Jack Wallack's side.

"Well, here I am!" she said, looking up at him and laughing a little breathlessly.

"Yes, and ten minutes late, too," he added. His quick smile flashed out as he took her by the arm and gave her a shake.

"Angela," he turned toward the girl who silently watched them from the window of her car. "I want you to know Miss Honey Lou Huntley, who is my dad's special guardian angel down here at the mills."

He looked from one to the other of the two bright faces. "Miss Allen is a great friend of my dad's," he explained to Honey Lou. "She often comes down here to get him and take him home."

Honey Lou racked her brains. But for the life of her she could not remember ever having seen this beautiful smiling person before. In all the six months she had worked for "Grumpy."

"Are you sure she often comes down here?" she asked Jack when they were in his car and were driving down between the lamp posts of Exchange street. "She's so beautiful that I'd surely remember her. I'd ever seen her before. She's the loveliest-looking thing I ever laid my eyes on."

"Isn't she?" Jack agreed with enthusiasm, and a hot little flame of jealousy shot through Honey Lou's heart.

She looked at him sharply. Just how well did he know this Angela Allen, with her saint's face and her fashion-plate clothes? Just how much did she attract him, Honey Lou wondered.

And while she was wondering, Jack Wallack answered the unspoken questions that poured into her mind like waters through a flood-gate.

"My dad always calls Angela 'Angel,'" he said, as the car turned into Chester row with its black-looking buildings, all shut up for the night.

"Is she as good as all that?" asked Honey Lou. She gave him a quick sideways look and saw that he was nodding his head.

"She surely is," he answered seriously. "She spends most of her time doing nice things for people who need to have nice things done for them. Goes down to Holy Cross hospital once a week to tell stories to the sick little kids there—and all that sort of thing, you know."

"Holy Cross hospital," Honey Lou repeated, "why, that's where Marget, my half-sister, works. She's in the office there—"

She broke off suddenly and gave a soft, husky little laugh.

"Isn't it the funniest thing?" she asked, turning her eager face up to his in the darkness, "we don't know a single thing about each other, do we? You and I? But here we are riding along together as if we were the best friends in the world! I wonder what your Miss Allen thought tonight when she saw me get into this car with you."

"Nothing at all, probably," the man at her side said, "but if she did think anything of it, it was sure to be something pretty nice. Angela never had an unkind thought about anybody in her life. She's just plain good, through and through. The Head says that—"

"Who's 'The Head,' for goodness sake?" Honey Lou asked.

"My mother," he laughed. "My dad and I always call her that. He may be the big noise down at the mills, but at home it's my mother who runs things. I'd like you to meet my mother, Honey Lou. She's a wonder."

One of his hands left the wheel of the car and groped for hers.

"Honey Lou," he said again. But she drew back into her corner of the seat.

"Don't do that!" she cried sharply. "Please keep your hands on the wheel and your eyes on the road, or first thing you know you'll be trying to wrestle a telegraph pole or a street car or something."

She said nothing more until the long black road swung into Arbor street. But she was thinking her own thoughts and they were gloomy ones.

"That yellow-headed girl is in love with him," she told herself unhappily, remembering the chilly glance that Angela Allen had sent her from the open window of her car, "and if he thinks she's so wonderful, why hasn't he married her long ago?"

She was going to ask herself that question a good many times during the weeks that followed.

"Have you known this Angel person very long?" she asked, when the black roadster slid to a standstill before her own door.

"Ever since I can remember,"

Jack Wallack said in a matter-of-fact voice, "she lives next door to us, and she's always at our house."

Honey Lou leaned over and opened the door of the car.

"She's awfully pretty and I suppose she's just as nice as you say she is," she observed, getting out and standing beside the machine.

"But she's awfully cold-looking, isn't she?—Blondes always are. I think—"

The man in the car made a low sound in his throat. It was halfway between a snort and a chuckle and it might have meant anything.

He jumped out and stood beside her. "I'll take you up to your door," he said, and he followed the girl up the narrow, dimly-lit flight of steps that led to the second-floor flat where she lived.

The door at the head of the stairs opened as they came up and Mrs. Huntley stood in the path of the yellow light that streamed from the room behind her. She had on a blue-patterned dress of soft challis and her graying hair was piled high on her head in a quizzical pompadour.

Honey Lou was very proud of her as she stood there, fine-looking and every inch a lady, with a welcoming smile on her face.

"My mother—Mr. Wallack," she introduced them, and then added: "Mr. Wallack drove me home from the office tonight."

"That was very kind of you, I'm sure, Mr. Wallack," her mother said in her soft southern voice.

"It always worries me to have Honey Lou out alone after dark—especially down in that awful neighborhood where the mills are."

She put an arm around the girl's slender shoulders—and Jack Wallack realized suddenly that it was a strange sight to this gentle-faced, low-voiced woman to have her daughter go to the mills to earn her daily bread.

He had a new and startling impression of Honey Lou. Before that moment, he had thought of her simply as a girl who worked in his father's office, the prettiest girl he had ever clasped his eyes on, and the most desirable. But, as he saw her now in her home setting, he realized that she had been brought up as carefully as any of the girls of his own world, and that she could not be treated lightly by a man any more than those girls could be treated lightly. She was no plaything for anybody. She was too fine for that.

They made a bright picture—the mother and daughter—as they stood there in the doorway of the little flat and said goodnight to him. And it was a picture that stayed in his mind all the way home to his father's big comfortable white house in Summit street.

The lights of his car flashed across the lawn as he turned into the wide driveway and showed him the figure of Angela Allen, just going up the front steps of the house. She turned when she saw him and waved her hand. She was still standing on the porch, waiting for him, when he came around from the garage.

"Well, did you get Miss Honey Lou home safe and sound?" she asked, as they went toward the house together. "That's the funniest name I ever heard in my life—Honey Lou. It sounds more like a breakfast food or a stick of cheap candy than a girl."

She laughed gently. But Jack Wallack did not even smile. "How 'Angel' he said, 'that's the first catty thing I ever heard you say in my life.'"

It was just ten days later—on a Saturday afternoon—that Honey Lou heard from Angela Allen.

She came home from the mills at five o'clock, to find a letter for her lying on the table in the sitting room of the flat.

"It looks like a wedding announcement, doesn't it?" she asked her mother as she tore open the thick white envelope.

"But it isn't," she murmured, skimming it with her eyes. "It's from Angela Allen. She wants me to come to her house for dinner next Saturday night. It's Jack Wallack's birthday, she says. I suppose she's having a party. But I'm not going. I don't know her or any of the people who would be there."

Mrs. Huntley took the letter out of her hands and read it.

"Why, of course, you're going to go," she said firmly. "It's your chance to meet the kind of people I want you to know. And of course, Jack Wallack has asked this Miss Allen to invite you. You've got to go, Honey Lou."

Honey Lou's eyes were thoughtful as she went into the bedroom. On Saturday afternoon, she and Marget stopped work earlier than usual and they always spent the extra time in doing all the little things that they were too busy to do during the week. The flat became, for the time, a beauty shop and sewing room, where they sharpened their hand, manicured their nails and mended and pressed their few clothes.

Marget was sitting in the little white bedroom now, drying her dark hair in front of the electric heater. She had a Turkish towel around her shoulders, and above it her rather plain face was grave and dreamy.

"Hello, Honey," she said, when the younger girl came in and tossed her wraps down upon the foot of her bed. "I asked Steve Mayhew about your friend, Angela Allen, today. He says she comes down to the hospital about once a month to tell stories. She's supposed to come every Wednesday afternoon, but I suppose she's too busy."

Honey Lou scarcely heard her. Her mind was on the letter. Read this, Marget, and tell me what you think of it. She held it out to her sister.

"Why, I think it's a perfectly lovely invitation," Marget said, when she had read it. "You're going to go, aren't you?"

Honey Lou shrugged her shoulders. "I haven't anything to wear," she sighed—the old, old plaint of woman-kind.

She crossed the room to the clothes closet and pulled a dress from its hanger, then flung it back on a hook.

"It doesn't seem fair, Marget," she said, turning around from the closet, "that some girls should have everything they want and not even have to lift a hand to get it, does it?"

She sat down on the side of the bed and her shadowy eyes fixed themselves on the faded, flowery wallpaper. But she did not see it. Her vision was filled with the picture of a girl in black velvet and many strands of pearl beads. "A girl with sunny hair and dove-colored eyes, who had looked coldly at her from the window of a great automobile."

"I wouldn't step inside of Angela Allen's house unless I looked like a million dollars," she declared. "Anything that I own is just an old dishrag compared to the clothes she wears. You just ought to see her, Marget!"

"I don't have to see her," Marget answered loyally. "I know that, no matter what she wears, she'll never be half as pretty as you are, Honey Lou. And if I were you, I'd certainly go to that party. I wouldn't let clothes stop me."

Honey Lou has her first taste of high life—And something else, too. Read about it in tomorrow's chapter.

WHOLE WHEAT BREAD AND CABBAGE URGED FOR NEBRASKA JAIL

HARTINGTON, Neb., Nov. 6.—Substitution of a whole wheat and cabbage diet in place of the bread and water served as punishment to violators of the dry laws, is urged upon County Judge Wilbur F. Bryant, of this place, in a letter received from Mrs. Della Ross, dietician of Bloomington, Ill. Mrs. Ross makes her plea on the grounds of health.

"If the diet of these prisoners is to be punishment," her letter reads, "almost any diet differing from their usual one, and taking away from them things that they like, would serve the purpose."

"To put them on a bread and water diet, however, is really inflicting double punishment, since this diet does not contain sufficient nourishment to maintain normal tissues of their bodies."

"It seems to me that the ends of justice would be met equally well, if, instead of this, a diet of whole wheat bread, a portion of raw or cooked cabbage and a glass of water, was substituted. This would still be punishment but it would not break down the prisoners' healthy tissues nor cause them to become undernourished, that illness would result."

"I make this suggestion out of a long experience in meeting the diet problems of hundreds of men and women."

Judge Bryant did not indicate whether or not he would accept Mrs. Ross' suggestion.

PENNY THOUGHTS

Is Humankind progressing? Continued wars, a deluge of foolish and futile laws, the bawling of Professional Reformers, make it appear to be dormant or retrogressing.

Yet all classes of persons are enjoying longer life. Women have an equal freedom with men.

Babies have a better chance than ever before. Universities are finding it hard to expand with the increased numbers of students who wish to enroll.

The sale of books was never greater. The world is going to continue to be burdened with troubles, but there probably will be fewer of them.

SHOOT PLANE FROM TURRET OF GUNBOAT

LOS ANGELES, HARBOR, Nov. 6.—As a result of the recent successful catapulting of a Loening amphibian biplane from the gun turret of a battleship by a powder explosion, the Navy Department will order every battleship in the fleet equipped with the catapults, it was learned today.

The experiment, made aboard the U. S. S. West Virginia marked the first time that a 5100 pound "amphibian" plane has been launched by means of a powder catapult. A charge of powder, equivalent to that used in an eight-inch shell, shot the ship into space and, without a falter the plane soared over Los Angeles harbor.

Navy officers declared that the success of the experiment will more closely link together the battleship and the airplane.

SAN QUENTIN HAS DAILY NEWSPAPER

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 6.—The Wall City News, a "newspaper and nothing else but," believed to be the only daily paper ever published anywhere behind prison walls, has just made its bow in San Quentin penitentiary, across the bay from San Francisco. It is a sporting sheet, letter size, four pages, neatly printed, and Vol. 1, No. 1, announces it has the sanction of Warden Frank J. Smith. Frank E. Fenton is editor.

TEXAS CRUDE OIL MAKES 1926 GAIN

AUSTIN, Texas, Nov. 6.—The past year has shown a decidedly marked improvement in the crude oil production of Texas. Great rapidity in growth was shown, according to a statement by Clarence E. Gilmore, chairman of the Railroad Commission.

The prospect of Texas leading the country in production of crude oil by January 1, was the prediction of Gilmore, provided the increase shown in the past few months continues.

Quoting figures of the American Petroleum Institute, for the week ending October 16, Gilmore declared that Texas was but 10,540 barrels behind California, the leading crude oil producer of the United States.

During that period, California produced 608,300 barrels while Texas had 597,800 barrels.

North Texas showed the largest increase in production over a corresponding period of 1925. Production in this section showed 244,350 barrels for the week ending October 16, 1926, compared with 76,650 barrels for the corresponding week in 1925.

ILLINOIS FLOODED CITIES WANT HELP

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Nov. 6.—Aid by the federal government and by the state of Illinois is hoped for by residents of the flood-ridden Illinois river valley.

Annual expenditure by the U. S. government of $2,000,000 for this purpose will be asked in a bill which Congressman Henry T. Rainey, of Carrollton, Ill., will present to congress at the next session, he has informed the Association of Levee and Drainage Districts of Illinois.

The federal government now spends $10,000,000 annually for relief work in the Mississippi river valley. Under Rainey's bill this amount would be increased to $12,000,000 and the scope of the relief work be broadened to include that in the Illinois river valley.

The plan for federal aid includes a plan for state relief, which has been laid before Governor Len Small. The main proposals of the project are: appropriation of $1,000,000 for widening the channel of the Illinois river and increasing the height and length of bridge spans; establishing a $500,000 fund from which those who suffer flood losses may borrow money.
